Historical Data:

About 1735 Noël Serré, grandson of a Huguenot emigrant, built a substantial plantation house on Wambaw Creek. This house passed to Daniel Huger Horry when he married Judith, daughter of Noël Serré. Horry squared the house by adding another pair of rooms on the second story and large extensions at each end. One of these is taken up by the large ballroom. For the sake of symmetry false windows have been used in the outside of these additions. About 1790, the deep portico was added, and George Washington was the first guest to pass through its tall colonade.
