Library of Congress Publications on Africa Since 1960 947
Guides in Preparation or Under Consideration 949

A selection of publications on Africa issued by or for the U.S. government from the late eighteenth century to September 1975 is recorded in this guide. Except for publications specifically on Egypt, all of Africa is covered, including the islands of the southeastern Atlantic and western Indian oceans.[1] This guide is based on the holdings of the Library of Congress, other federal government collections in the Washington, D.C. area, and the collections of other American libraries reporting to the National Union Catalog, New Serial Titles, and the Joint Acquisitions List of Africana.[2] Published indexes, such as the Dictionary Catalog of the Library of the Center for Applied Linguistics, were also of value in identifying titles.[3] Material in the Library of Congress is indicated by call numbers for cataloged works in the general collections, by the symbol DLC for uncataloged items, or by symbols indicating location in special collections (see Key to Symbols). National Union Catalog symbols are also used to indicate the location of titles not in the Library of Congress but held by other American libraries. A special note identifies material in the collection of the Reference Center, Agency for International Development, indicating the restrictions placed on the use of items there. As access to several other federal government collections cited in this guide is also restricted, the user should consult Libraries and Reference Facilities in the Area of the District of Columbia, ninth edition, for information on their regulations.[4] Data on titles not identified as held in American collections has been gathered from several published bibliographic records (see Key to Sources).

Entries are grouped into five chronological sections subdivided by region or country. In the final section covering the past twenty-three years, regional and country listings are further divided by subject. This section, by far the largest in the guide, also includes the widest variety of material. While the first four are limited primarily to congressional and presidential documents, commercial reports, diplomatic papers, and treaties, the 1952–75 section also features translations issued by the Joint Publications Research Service and printed and mimeographed studies concerning American assistance programs prepared by or for federal government agencies. A major objective of the present study is to improve bibliographic control over this material, including reports prepared under government contract by universities and other research centers. For this reason, the term government-sponsored publications has been interpreted broadly to cover documents for which a government agency provided support for research and/or for publication. Many of these contract studies include prefatory statements indicating that the views, interpretations, recommendations, and conclusions presented are those of the author. As an example, the preface of Project Africa (item 3320 of this guide), prepared at Carnegie-Mellon University for the Office of Education, states: "Contractors undertaking such projects under government sponsorship are encouraged to express freely their professional judgment in the conduct of the project. Points of view or opinions stated do not therefore necessarily represent official Office of Education position or policy."

Only unclassified material is recorded here. Titles marked restricted, confidential, or official use only, with no indication that they were subsequently declassified, are not included. Also omitted are congressional bills and resolutions and multilithed reports prepared for Congress by the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, and its predecessor, the Legislative Reference Service. For background information on various agencies cited in this bibliography or their publications, useful introductory guides are Government Publications and Their Use, second revised edition; Guide to U.S. Government Publications; Introduction to United States Public Documents; and the federal government section of Government Publications: A Guide to Bibliographic Tools, fourth edition.[5]

Publications cited here reflect the growth of American interest and involvement in Africa over two centuries, from the tentative contacts of the late eighteenth century to the many bilateral and multilateral relationships that today link the United States with African nations. Subjects covered in the first four chronological sections suggest the episodic nature of official American contacts with Africa to the 1950s. The first section, 1785–1819, is devoted almost entirely to the diplomatic correspondence, presidential reports, and treaties regarding American relations with North African states or the "Barbary powers," especially questions concerning trade rights and the payment of tribute. In preparing this section, a primary source of information was Naval Documents Related to the United States Wars with the Barbary Powers: Naval Operations Including Diplomatic Background (item 1). The American State Papers provided additional citations on congressional and presidential documents, while the Catalog of National Archives Microfilm Publications was used to identify American consular reports in this period and in later years to the early twentieth century.[6] For treaties covering the late eighteenth and the nineteenth centuries, useful guides were The Public Statutes at Large of the United States and Treaties and Other International Acts of the United States of America.[7] The latter publication includes the original texts of treaties with English translations and information on the diplomatic negotiations leading to the agreements.

The second section, 1820–62, features documents on the suppression of the African slave trade and the colonization of Liberia. Several congressional reports of this period include appendices, apparently prepared by the American Colonization Society, with detailed descriptions of early Liberian coastal settlements. These studies, such as African Colonization–Slave Trade-Commerce (item 102) and President Tyler's Message to Congress in 1845 (item 108), are of basic importance in the study of the early history of Liberia. Most major works are analyzed in detail in the Index to United States Documents Relating to Foreign Affairs, 1828–1861.[8]

Publications recorded in the third section, 1863–1920, cover the period from the establishment of diplomatic relations with Liberia by the Lincoln administration to the international negotiations on Africa that followed the First World War. America's role in Africa during a time of European expansion there is a topic of discussion in congressional and presidential publications and in material prepared by the Department of State. This question was raised in 1885 concerning America's involvement in international negotiations on the Congo basin. Later, during the Theodore Roosevelt administration, it again became an issue in connection with Liberia's request for financial assistance and demands by American missionaries for official support from Washington in their efforts to effect reforms in the Congo Free State. Also featured are documents on the South African War (1899–1902), initial American contacts with Ethiopia, and the question of European control of Morocco. Major bibliographic sources for this period are A Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications of the United States, September 5, 1774–March 4, 1881; Comprehensive Index to the Publications of the United States Government, 1881–1893; and the Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications, which began in January 1895 and served the compiler as an invaluable tool in identifying titles issued from that time to 1975.[9]

The years covered in the fourth section, 1921–51, were marked by conflict and rising political expectations in Africa following the Second World War. Libya's independence in December 1951 signaled the beginning of the end of European colonialism—a turning point in the political evolution of the continent that would bring new dimensions to American relations with African states. Official U.S. documents covering the 1920s and 1930s, the Second World War, and the postwar years focus on several specific crises: Liberia's financial situation and reports of forced labor there, the Italo-Ethiopian conflict, questions concerning American rights in Morocco, and the North African campaign of 1942–43. The first significant bibliographic compilations on Africa by federal government agencies were produced in this period, primarily by the Library of Congress, concerning regions or countries that were then in the international spotlight. For citations to the major diplomatic documents relating to these issues, the Department of State's Foreign Relations of the United States was of great value.[10]

The final section of this study, 1952–75, accounts for more than 80 percent of the entries—a result of the impact of emergent Africa on American policy during the past twenty-three years. Documentation on this period indicates both the wide range of American involvement and the continuity of interest of the U.S. Government in problems of African development and decolonization. Congressional concern is clearly demonstrated in the frequent references to Africa in the Congressional Record, identified through its sessional indexes.[11] Reports on hearings and congressional study missions provide details not only on American policy toward Africa but also on the background and current status of various political, economic, and social issues; examples are The Faces of Africa: Diversity and Progress; Repression and Struggle (item 1736), Drought and Famine in West Africa (item 3228), and The Rhodesian Sanctions Bill (item 6099).

American assistance programs in North Africa and the Black majority-ruled nations south of the Sahara are documented in studies prepared by or for the Agency for International Development and its predecessors. From the Second World War, with the establishment of the U.S. Economic Commission to Liberia in 1944, a succession of government organizations has recorded information on American development efforts in such fields as agriculture, communications, education, health, and transportation. Agencies with primary responsibility for economic and technical assistance have been successively the Economic Cooperation Administration, 1948–51; Mutual Security Agency, 1951–53; Foreign Operations Administration, 1953–55; International Cooperation Administration, 1955–61; and Agency for International Development (AID), 1961 to date.

Most studies prepared by these agencies or produced under their auspices by nongovernment research organizations have been identified from the card catalog of AID's Reference Center or from information supplied by universities and other institutions. Unfortunately, published bibliographies cover only a fraction of such studies. Of these, the most useful is A.I.D. Research and Development Abstracts (item 1126, note), an annotated guide indicating how copies can be obtained in paper form or microfiche. Research in Education provided titles and abstracts of material prepared under the auspices of the Office of Education, while Government Reports Announcements & Index and earlier compilations of the National Technical Information Service were used to identify publications in microform issued by or for government agencies, including military research centers.[12] Additional material prepared under military auspices but not cited in this guide can be identified in the annual supplements to Africa; Selected References (item 1121), issued by the Air University Library.

Government-sponsored translations into English of books and periodical articles on Africa constitute another major component of this final section. Since the 1950s, the Joint Publications Research Service (JPRS) has translated reports on economic, political, and social issues from African, European, and Asian publications. As most of the material comes from French-language sources, a high proportion of the translations concern francophone Africa.[13]

Given the volume of documentation on Africa issued by or for government agencies, especially in the past two decades, there is little doubt that some important publications were inadvertently omitted from this compilation. Periodic supplements are under consideration to list additional material published before 1975 and to bring it up to date. Any additions, corrections, or suggestions would therefore be most welcome.

Throughout the course of this study, the compiler was assisted by Library of Congress staff members and librarians and African studies specialists in other research centers. H. Dwight Beers and Betty J. Harris of the African Section helped to prepare entries for translations, and Gary D. Jensen, a former member of the section's staff, compiled citations on American-African relations in the nineteenth century. George D. Selim, Near East Section, Orientalia Division, provided guidance on material relating to North Africa, and Mary Jane Gibson, Bibliography Section, General Reference and Bibliography Division, reviewed the text. Special thanks go to Edna A. Falbo and the staff of the Reference Center, U.S. Agency for International Development, who provided information on contract studies prepared by and for the agency and its predecessors.

The compiler expresses his deep appreciation to the following universities and other research centers that contributed citations or other information to this guide: Boston University; Colorado State University; Columbia University, Teachers College; Cornell University; Hampton Institute; Harvard Institute of International Development; Harvard University, Graduate School of Education; Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace; Indiana University; Kansas State University; Michigan State University; Ohio University; Rand Corporation; San Francisco State University; Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville; Stanford Research Institute; University of California at Los Angeles; University of Illinois; University of Massachusetts; University of Minnesota; University of Missouri; University of Southern California; University of Wisconsin, Land Tenure Center; University of Wyoming; Yale University; and Yale University, Economic Growth Center.

Report of Feb. 28, 1885, submitted by Andrew G. Curtin for the committee, was a protest against American participation in the Berlin Conference as "the beginning of a new departure" from the nation's traditional policy of non-involvement in disputes and negotiations among foreign powers.

Note: Grover Cleveland, who began his first term as President on March 4, 1885, a few days after the conclusion of the Berlin Conference, refused to submit the General Act of the conference to the Senate for its advice and consent, and it was never ratified by the United States. He spelled out his reasons in his first annual message to Congress, Dec. 8, 1885, suggesting that the American negotiators at Berlin had exceeded their authority in signing an agreement which made the United States "appear, without reserve or qualification, as signatories to a joint international engagement imposing on the signers the conservation of the territorial integrity of distant regions where we have no established interests or control." U.S. Dept. of State. Conditions in Liberia. Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State relative to the appointment of a commission to inquire as to conditions in Liberia. [Washington, Govt. Print. Off., 1909] 8 p. (60th Congress, 2d session. Senate. Doc. 666) DT632.U6 J66 Serial no. 5408

Read, referred to Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered printed, January 19, 1909.

Report of Secretary of State Root, transmitted by President Roosevelt, calls for an appropriation to support an American commission of inquiry into Liberian fiscal and political problems. Noting that the United States has a "duty" to maintain this "American colony," he remarks that "the interest of the people of the United States in the welfare and progress of the millions of American citizens of the black race in the United States also furnishes a strong reason for helping to maintain this colony, whose success in self-government will give hope and courage, and whose failure would bring discouragement to the entire race."

[Washington, Govt. Print. Off., 1910] 37 p. (61st Congress, 2d session. Senate. Doc. 457) DT632.U5

March 25, 1910; read, referred to Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered printed.

R. P. Falkner, George Sale, E. J. Scott, Commissioners.

The introductory statement of Secretary of State Philander C. Knox, transmitted by President William H. Taft, outlines the events leading to the establishment of the commission—Liberia's financial crisis and the appeal of the Liberian commission to the United States in 1908. This is followed by the "Report of the Commission of the United States of America to the Republic of Liberia," Oct. 6, 1909 (p. 12-37), discussing boundary problems with British and French possessions, the Frontier Force of Liberia, foreign loans, economic requirements, internal administration, possibilities for colonization by American blacks, and recommendations for greater assistance.

Remarks in the U.S. Senate.

Senator Bilbo introduces a bill (S. 2231), called the "Greater Liberia Act," to establish a Bureau of Colonization for assisting U.S. citizens "desirous to migrate to the Republic of Liberia." As part of this proposal, the United States would purchase land in British and French colonies adjacent to Liberia, add this territory to "Greater Liberia," and acquire a land grant from the Liberian Government. His remarks include a review of the colonization movement.

Earlier, on May 24, 1938, he had called for the establishment of a "Repatriation Commission" to assist in the proposed emigration program (Congressional Record, 75th Congress, 3d session, v. 83, May 24, 1938: 7347-70. J11.R5, v. 83). Additional remarks on the "Greater Liberia" proposal are given in the Congressional Record, 79th Congress, 1st session, v. 91, May 10, 1945: 4399-4419 (J11.R5, v. 91).

Note: In 1949, Senator William Langer introduced a bill (S. 1880) in the 81st Congress, 1st session "to provide aid to persons in the United States desirous of migrating to the Republic of Liberia." He subsequently introduced similar legislation in the first sessions of the 82nd through the 86th Congresses.

Print. Off., 1974. xv, 235 p. maps. DLC

Charles C. Diggs, Jr., chairman.

"Printed for the Committee on International Relations."

Report on three study missions by Congressman Diggs. The first, in 1972, covered five sub-Saharan states and dependencies—Ivory Coast, Nigeria, Syechelles Islands, Tanzania, and Ethiopia—with additional stops in the United Arab Republic (Egypt), Lebanon, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Yugoslavia, and Canada to learn of their policies toward African nations. A second report covers the proceedings of the International Conference of Experts in Support of Victims of Colonialism and Apartheid in Southern Africa, Oslo, Norway, April 1973. The last report, based on the study mission of November-December 1973, discusses Brazilian relations with Africa, drought problems in the Sahel with specific reference to Senegal, Niger, and Upper Volta, and a general review of conditions in Swaziland and Lesotho.

Graphs indicating United States trade with Africa in 1972 as percentages of total African production and American consumption are given on pages xii-xiii.

Note: A more comprehensive guide to American officials assigned to African posts is included in the Foreign Service List (JX1705.A2), issued three times a year through August 1975 by the U.S. Department of State. In addition to listing foreign service personnel in each post, recent issues include officials of the Agency for International Development, Peace Corps, U.S. Information Agency, the Foreign Agricultural Service of the Department of Agriculture, and armed forces attachés. In 1973, the Historical Office of the Department of State issued a single volume compilation, United States Chiefs of Mission, 1778-1973 (JX1706.A59U54 1973).

For information on African diplomats assigned to the United States, see the Diplomatic List (JX1705.A22), issued quarterly by the Department of State. Supplementary information is provided in the department's Employees of Diplomatic Missions (quarterly; JX1705.A235) and in its Foreign Consular Offices in the United States (annual; JX1705.A28).

Southern Rhodesia

Note: Established in the Library of Congress as Southern Rhodesia (cataloged under Rhodesia, Southern), most publications cited in this guide refer to the country as Rhodesia. For simplicity, Rhodesia is used in the text of this guide, following the usage of the U.S. Department of State in its Background Notes series. This explanation is given in the November 1975 revision of the Notes (see item 6027): "Although the colony calls itself the Republic of Rhodesia, the British Parliament—the only legal authority that can change the name of a British territory—has not changed the name from Southern Rhodesia. African nationalists refer to the country as Zimbabwe."

Prepared for the U.S. Agency for International Development under contract no. AID/afr-264.
Note: The consortium, usually identified by its initials, CSNRD, was organized at the request of the U.S. AID Mission to Nigeria to study American assistance programs, analyze development potentials, and make recommendations for planning improved agricultural programs. It consisted of four universities—Michigan State University (which provided administrative management), Colorado State University, Kansas State University, and the University of Wisconsin—plus the Research Triangle Institute (Durham, N.C.) and two U.S. Government agencies—the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture and the U.S. Dept. of the Interior.
All CSNRD publications recorded in this guide can be identified by consulting the Index under the heading Consortium for the Study of Nigerian Rural Development. All numbered CSNRD publications examined by the compiler have at head of title the names of the consortium's participants, including the U.S. Agency for International Development and U.S. Dept. of Agriculture. Most publications include a covering letter from the project director to the director, U.S. AID Mission to Nigeria.

SuDocs For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. When ordering, cite the GPO catalog number; it appears in parentheses after the symbol SuDocs. Add 25 percent for foreign postage. Increases in costs make it necessary for the Superintendent of Documents to increase the selling price of many publications offered. As it is not feasible for the Superintendent of Documents to correct the prices manually in all publications stocked, the prices charged on your order may differ from the prices printed in the publications.
