LESSON III.

STROKE the cat. Play with the dog. Eat the bread. Drink the milk. Hold the cup. Lay down the knife.

Look at the fly. See the horse. Shut the door. Bring the chair. Ring the bell. Get your book.

LESSON IV.

LET me comb your head. Ask Betty to wash your face. Go and see for some bread. Drink milk, if you are dry. Play on the floor with the ball. Do not touch the ink; you will black your hands.

What do you want to say to me? Speak slow, not so fast. Did you fall? You will not cry, not you; the baby cries. Will you walk in the fields?

LESSON V.

COME to me, my little girl. Are you tired of playing? Yes. Sit down and rest yourself, while I talk to you.
Have you seen the baby? Poor little thing. O here it comes. Look at him. How helpless he is. Four years ago you were as feeble as this very little boy.

See, he cannot hold up his head. He is forced to lie on his back. If his mamma do not turn him to the right or left side, he will soon begin to cry. He cries to tell her, that he is tired with lying on his back.

LESSON VI.

PERHAPS he is hungry. What shall we give him to eat? Poor fellow, he cannot eat. Look in his mouth, he has no teeth.

How did you do when you were a baby like him? You cannot tell. Do you want to know? Look then at the dog, with her pretty puppy. You could not help yourself as well as the puppy. You could only open your mouth, when you were lying, like William, on my knee. So I put you to my breast, and you sucked, as the puppy sucks now, for there was milk enough for you.

LESSON VII.

WHEN you were hungry, you began to cry, because you could not speak. You were seven months without teeth, always sucking. But after you got one, you began to gnaw a crust of bread. It was not long before another came pop. At ten months you had four pretty white teeth, and you used to bite me. Poor mamma! Still I did not cry, because I am not a child, but you hurt me very much. So I said to papa, it is time the little girl should eat. She is not naughty, yet she hurts me. I have given her a crust of bread, and I must look for some other milk.

The cow has got plenty, and her jumping calf eats grass very well. He has got more teeth than my little girl. Yes, says papa, and he tapped you on the cheek, you are old enough to learn to eat? Come to me, and I will teach you, my little dear, for you must not hurt poor mamma, who has given you her milk, when you could not take anything else.
LESSON VIII.

YOU were then on the carpet, for you could not walk well. So when you were in a hurry, you used to run quick, quick, quick, on your hands and feet, like the dog.

Away you ran to papa, and putting both your arms round his leg, for your hands were not big enough, you looked up at him, and laughed. What did this laugh say, when you could not speak? Cannot you guess by what you now say to papa?—Ah! it was, play with me, papa!—play with me!

Papa began to smile, and you knew that the smile was always—Yes. So you got a ball, and papa threw it along the floor—Roll—roll—roll; and you ran after it again—and again. How pleased you were. Look at William, he smiles; but you could laugh loud—Ha! ha! ha!—Papa laughed louder than the little girl, and rolled the ball still faster.

Then he put the ball on a chair, and you were forced to take hold of the back, and stand up to reach it. At last you reached too far, and down you fell: not indeed on your face, because you put out your hands. You were not much hurt; but the palms of your hands smarted with the pain, and you began to cry, like a little child.

It is only very little children who cry when they are hurt; and it is to tell their mamma, that something is the matter with them. Now you can come to me, and say, Mamma,
I have hurt myself. Pray rub my hand: it smarts. Put something on it, to make it well. A piece of rag, to stop the blood. You are not afraid of a little blood—not you. You scratched your arm with a pin: it bled a little; but it did you no harm. See, the skin is grown over it again.

LE S S O N IX.

TAKE care not to put pins in your mouth, because they will stick in your throat, and give you pain. Oh! you cannot think what pain a pin would give you in your throat, should it remain there: but, if you by chance swallow it, I should be obliged to give you, every morning, something bitter to drink. You never tasted any thing so bitter! and you would grow very sick. I never put pins in my mouth; but I am older than you, and know how to take care of myself.

My mamma took care of me, when I was a little girl, like you. She bade me never put any thing in my mouth, without asking her what it was.

When you were a baby, with no more sense than William, you put every thing in your mouth to gnaw, to help your teeth to cut through the skin. Look at the puppy, how he bites that piece of wood. William presses his gums against my finger. Poor boy! he is so young, he does not know what he is doing. When you bite any thing, it is because you are hungry.
LESSON X.

See how much taller you are than William. In four years you have learned to eat, to walk, to talk. Why do you smile? You can do much more, you think: you can wash your hands and face. Very well. I should never kiss a dirty face. And you can comb your head with the pretty comb you always put by in your own drawer. To be sure, you do all this, to be ready to take a walk with me. You would be obliged to stay at home, if you could not comb your own hair. Betty is busy getting the dinner ready, and only brushes William's hair, because he cannot do it for himself.

Betty is making an apple-pye. You love an apple-pye; but I do not bid you make one. Your hands are not strong enough to mix the butter and flour together; and you must not try to pare the apples, because you cannot manage a great knife.

Never touch the large knives; they are very sharp, and you might cut your finger to the bone. You are a little girl, and ought to have a little knife. When you are as tall as I am, you shall have a knife as large as mine; and when you are as strong as I am, and have learned to manage it, you will not hurt yourself.

You can trundle a hoop, you say; and jump over a stick. O, I forgot! —and march like the men in the red coats, when papa plays a pretty tune on the fiddle.
LESSON XI.

WHAT, you think that you shall soon be able to dress yourself entirely? I am glad of it: I have something else to do. You may go, and look for your frock in the drawer; but I will tie it, till you are stronger. Betty will tie it, when I am busy.

I button my gown myself: I do not want a maid to assist me, when I am dressing. But you have not yet got sense enough to do it properly, and must beg somebody to help you, till you are older.

Children grow older and wiser at the same time. William is not able to take a piece of meat, because he has not got the sense which would make him think that, without teeth, meat would do him harm. He cannot tell what is good for him.
The sense of children grows with them. You know much more than William, now you walk alone, and talk; but you do not know as much as the boys and girls you see playing yonder, who are half as tall again as you; and they do not know half as much as their fathers and mothers, who are men and women grown. Papa and I were children, like you; and men and women took care of us. I carry William, because he is too weak to walk. I lift you over a stile, and over the gutter, when you cannot jump over it.

You know already, that potatoes will not do you any harm: but I must pluck the fruit for you, till you are wise enough to know the ripe apples and pears. The hard ones would make you sick, and then you must take physic. You do not love physic: I do not love it any more than you. But I have more sense than you; therefore I take care not to eat unripe fruit, or any thing else that would make my stomach ache, or bring out ugly red spots on my face.

When I was a child, my mamma chose the fruit for me, to prevent my making myself sick. I was just like you; I used to ask for what I saw, without knowing whether it was good or bad. Now I have lived a long time, I know what is good; I do not want any body to tell me.

LESSON XII.

LOOK at those two dogs. The old one brings the ball to me in a moment; the young one does not know how. He must be taught.

I can cut your shift in a proper shape. You would not know how to begin. You would spoil it; but you will learn.

John digs in the garden, and knows when to put the seed in the ground. You cannot tell whether it should be in the winter or summer. Try to find it out. When do the trees put out their leaves? In the spring, you say, after the cold weather. Fruit would not grow ripe without very warm weather. Now I am sure you can guess why the summer is the season for fruit.

Papa knows that peas and beans are good for us to eat with our meat. You are glad when you see them; but if he did not think for you, and have the seed put in the ground, we should have no peas or beans.
LESSON XIII.

POOR child, she cannot do much for herself. When I let her do anything for me, it is to please her: for I could do it better myself.

Oh! the poor puppy has tumbled off the stool. Run and stroke him. Put a little milk in a saucer to comfort him. You have more sense than he. You can pour the milk into the saucer without spilling it. He would cry for a day with hunger, without being able to get it. You are wiser than the dog, you must help him. The dog will love you for it, and run after you. I feed you and take care of you: you love me and follow me for it.
When the book fell down on your foot, it gave you great pain. The poor dog felt the same pain just now. Take care not to hurt him, when you play with him. And every morning leave a little milk in your basin for him. Do not forget to put the basin in a corner, lest somebody should fall over it.

When the snow covers the ground, save the crumbs of bread for the birds. In the summer they find feed enough, and do not want you to think about them.

I make broth for the poor man who is sick. A sick man is like a child, he cannot help himself.
LESSON XIV.

WHEN I caught cold some time ago, I had such a pain in my head, I could scarcely hold it up. Papa opened the door very softly, because he loves me. You love me, yet you made a noise. You had not the sense to know that it made my head worse, till papa told you.

Papa had a pain in the stomach, and he would not eat the fine cherries or grapes on the table. When I brought him a cup of camomile tea, he drank it without saying a word, or making an ugly face. He knows that I love him, and that I would not give him any thing to drink that has a bad taste, if it were not to do him good.
Lessons for Children.

You asked me for some apples when your stomach ached; but I was not angry with you. If you had been as wise as papa, you would have said, I will not eat the apples to-day, I must take some camomile tea.

You say that you do not know how to think. Yes; you do a little. The other day papa was tired; he had been walking about all the morning. After dinner he fell asleep on the sofa. I did not bid you be quiet; but you thought of what papa said to you, when my head ached. This made you think that you ought not to make a noise, when papa was resting himself. So you came to me, and said to me, very softly, Pray reach me my ball, and I will go and play in the garden, till papa wakes.
You were going out; but thinking again, you came back to me on your tip-toes. Whisper—whisper. Pray, mamma, call me, when papa wakes; for I shall be afraid to open the door to see, lest I should disturb him.

Away you went—creep—creep—and shut the door as softly as I could have done myself.

That was thinking. When a child does wrong at first, she does not know any better. But, after she has been told that she must not disturb mamma, when poor mamma is unwell, she thinks herself, that she must not wake papa when he is tired.

Another day we will see if you can think about any thing else.

FABLE I.

The Wolf and the Lamb.

ONE hot day, a Wolf and a Lamb came just at the same time to quench their thirst in the stream of a clear brook. The Wolf stood where the ground was high, and the Lamb stood down the stream, not far from him. But as the Wolf had a mind to a bit of soft flesh, he would fain fall out with the Lamb. Fool, says he, what is it you mean, that you stir up the mud so, and spoil the stream.
where I drink? You must be quite wrong, to be sure, Sir, said the poor Lamb; for the stream runs down from you to me, and not from me to you. Be that as it will, said the Wolf, you are a pert young rogue, and spoke a great deal of ill of me, more than half a year since. Sir, says the Lamb, that could not be; for I was not born at the time you speak of. No! said the Wolf; then I am sure it was that vile old knave your dad; and it is no more than just that his son should pay for it. With that he flew on the poor Lamb, and tore him limb from limb in a trice.

MORAL.

Rogues will be rogues, say what they may to be free from blame.
A Selection of Fables.

FABLE II.

The Wolf and the Crane.

THIS vile rogue of a Wolf was in such haste to eat up the poor Lamb, that one of the small bones stuck fast in his throat. Bless me! how this made him roar and howl! he vow'd and swore, by all that was good, that he would not kill a Lamb once more for the whole world. He ran first to this beast, and then to that; but as not one of them had the least love for him, they would not give him the least help. So at last he comes to the Crane, calls her a fine bird, and says he would give I know not what, if she would but take the bone from his throat. On this she put her long neck down his throat, and pulled out the bone at once. But when she told him of the pay which he had said he would give her for the cure; Fool, says he, you may think it well that I did not bite off your head; how then come you to think of pay?

MORAL.

If you help a rogue out of a scrape, you may think you are well off, if he does not cut your throat for your pains.

FABLE III.

The Wolf and the Sick Ass.

ONCE on a time, when an old Ass was sick, the fame of it spread far and near; some did not stick to say that He would die the next night. Our fly rogue of a Wolf had the luck to hear of it; and so up he comes to the young Als (the son of the old one) with a how do you do, my dear? Ah, poor child! adds he, I grieve for you as much as I can. They tell me your good old Dam is at the point of death. Is it true? pray, how does she do now, poor soul? Do? said the young Als: why she is not so bad yet by a great deal as you would have her be; and if you wait for her dead corpse to make a meal of, you will wait, I hope, till your guts are as light as a cork, and your neck as long as my tail.

MORAL.

Some deeds, which make a great show of love, are found in truth to come from B 6 the same view as those of the Wolf: When he went to see the sick Ass, he did not want to hear of her health, but to taste of her flesh: so true it is that all is not gold that shines, nor all love that speaks you fair. Be wise, then, and trust not too much to fine words which this or that man may give you.
FABLE IV.

The Wolf in Sheep's Clothes.

There are few rogues who do not come to a bad end at last. This was the case with our Wolf; for though he had put off more sly tricks by far than I have told you, yet at last he was caught in the snare. For one day, thinks he, if I put on the skin of a Sheep, I may then mix with the flock, and suck my fill of their sweet blood, and yet not be found out. But as the Man who took care of the sheep had the luck to find out the trick, he came up to the Wolf when he least thought of it, and put a strong cord round his neck. What! said the thief, will you hang one of your poor Sheep who bring forth.
Lambs to feed you, and good soft Wool to make warm clothes for you? No, you rogue, said the man; but when I catch a Wolf, I spare him not, though like you he may wear the garb of a sheep and look like a faint. And with that he tucks him up in a trice, and leaves him to swing on the next tree.

MORAL.

There is no art which can hide rogues.
Let those do no wrong who cannot bear that it should be known to their shame.

FABLE V.

The Fox and the Goat.

ONE day, as our Fox went to peep at a hen roost, he had the bad luck to fall into a well, where he swam first to this side, and then to that side, but could not get out in spite of all his pains. At last, a poor Goat came to the same place to seek some drink. So ho! friend Fox, said he, you quaff it off there at a great rate; I hope by this time you have quench'd your thirst. Thirst! said the fly rogue; what I have found here to drink is so clear and so sweet, that I cannot take my fill of it: do pray come down, my dear, and have a taste of it. With that, in leaps the Goat, as he bid him: but as soon as he was down, the Fox mounts on his horns, and leaps out of the well in a trice; and as he went off, Good b'ye, Sir Lack-wit, said he; if you had as much brains as you have beard, I should have been in the well still, and you might have stood on the brink of it to laugh at me, as I now do at you.
A Selection of Fables.

MORAL.

When a rogue gets in a scrape, he will give up the best friend he has to get out of it: so that you ought to know what a man is first, and then you may judge how far you ought to trust to what he says.

FABLE VI.

The Fox and the Wolf.

A WOLF, who had once laid in a great stock of good things to eat, kept close at home. Our Fox, whose eyes were quick to find out what was none of his own, had a mind, as they say, to go snacks with him; that is, to take all that he could get at: so off he trots post haste to a man that kept sheep, and tells him where the cave of the Wolf was. When the man heard of it, he takes a large club, and goes and knocks the poor Wolf on the head. But in a short time, as he went the same way, he found the Fox in the same cave, and as he knew him to be as vile a thief as the Wolf had been, he fell on him too, and broke one of his legs for him. The sight of a bear, who came in view just in the nick of time, made the man sheer off. But as the Bear had heard of the trick which the Fox had put on the Wolf, he cries out to him, as he saw him limp off, Harm watch, harm catch; you now go snacks with the Wolf in a way you did not dream of.

MORAL.

Think nothing gain that is ill got; and be sure, that he who hurts will be hurt.

---

FABLE VII.

The Boy and the Thief.

As a Boy sat and cried on the side of a well, a Thief, who came by just at the same time, asked him why he wept. The boy still sighs and sobs, and tells him that his string was broke, so that a cup of gold, which hung at the end of it, had drop’d down in the well. On this, the poor fool of a thief pulls off his clothes, and slides down that he might go and look for it, for, thinks he, if I can but find it, it will be no hard thing for me to keep it, and a brave find it will be. But when he had groped, and poked, and felt a long while, but all in vain, up he comes as vexed as he could be; when, to his no small grief and shame, he found, that for the cup of gold, which he thought to have made his own, the arch rogue of a boy had run off with his clothes, and left him to walk home in his bare skin.

MORAL.

Set a thief to catch a thief. We may learn too, that though a thief will steal from all he can, he does not like to be used in the same way; which proves that he well knows that his own thefts are bad deeds, and that he ought to smart for them, if he had his due.
FABLE VIII.

The Man and his Goose.

A POOR fool of a Man once had a Goose which laid eggs of gold; and this made the young rogue as proud as a horse. Come, come, said he, I may now hold up my head with the best of them all. Cheer up, my lad, for in a short time you may have a coach to ride in, and make the dust fly like smoke. But why did I say in a short time? Bless me! what a strange fool I am! It is but to rip up the Goose, and then I shall be as rich as King George at once. So to work he went, and ript up the Goose the same day. But he was a great fool for his pains; for when the poor goose was dead, he found nought but a few seeds, from which, it is true, more eggs might have been bred, if he had been so wise as to wait for them; but as there was no life and warmth in the Goose, to make them grow, they were of no more worth to him than the eggs of a wren.

MORAL. All grasp, all lose.

FABLE IX.
The Old Man who called for Death.
A POOR Old Man, who was forced to go to the wood to pick up some sticks and stumps, to make up a fire to dress his food and warm his hands, was so much spent with his load, that he threw it down at the foot of a large tree, and cried out for Death to come and put an end to his life. As soon as he had said the word, up came the tall grim King, with his dart and scythe in his hand; and each step he took, his bones (for he is all bones you know) made as much noise as the clack of a mill. Well, said Death, (with a wide grin) and what do you want of me, my friend? No harm, I hope, sweet Sir, said the Old Man, in a great fright; but I must beg of you to help me up with my load, that I may get home in time. Death went his way, and the Old Man took up the load, which he thought too great to bear, without his help, and went home full of joy at his good luck.

MORAL.

We are too apt to think our lot too hard to bear: those who do so, may be taught to think it a good one, by him who can send worse.

---

FABLE X.

The Frog and the Ox.

A PROUD Frog, who fed in the same field with a fat Ox, had a mind to try if she could swell up her hide, till she was as big as he was. Now for it, said she, let me see what I can do. But her Son, who saw what she would be at, begged hard of her to leave off and try no more; for, as he told her, if she were to try her heart out, it would all be in vain, and do her more harm than she thought of. Harm! you young fool, said she; why you know not what I can do, if I strive for it.

Do but look at me now, and see how fast I grow? And with that she puffs and blows, and strains and swells, till she burst her skin, and fell dead on the ground.

MORAL.

It is best to keep a due mean in all our schemes, and not spend our time in such things as are too hard and too high for us: For, if we aim at more than we have strength to go through with, we may well look to lose our pains; and, it may be, break our backs or our necks ere we leave off.
SIMPLE DIVISION.

PRACTICAL QUESTIONS under the PRECEDING RULES.

1. Add fourteen thousand, five hundred and nine; one thousand, nine hundred and twenty one; six hundred and twenty thousand, three hundred and forty-seven; and five million, twenty-three thousand, and nineteen, together.
   Ans. 5659896 sum.

2. What is the sum of 76129 + 54216 + 39127 + 62357 + 514026 ?
   Ans. 745855.

3. What is the difference between four million two hundred and ten thousand and twelve; and six hundred and fifty-nine thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven?
   Ans. 3550215.

4. Take nine hundred and one thousand and fifteen from one million, one thousand, one hundred and one.
   Ans. 100086.

5. A farm of 460 acres is let for 2 dollars per acre; how much does the rent amount to?
   Ans. 920 Dollars.

6. If a man’s income be 6 dollars a day, how much does it amount to in a year, allowing 365 days in a year?
8. 0.04 men have 17280 dollars divided equally among them; what is each man's part? Ans. 135 Dollars.
10. What is the third part of 3669? Ans. 1229.
12. What number must be added to 764 to make it 1256? Ans. 492.
13. By what number must I multiply 67, that the product may be 871? Ans. 13.
14. There are two numbers whose difference is 796, the greater number is 4320; I demand the less. Ans. 3524.
15. Supposing a man to have been born in the year 1762; how old was he in 1806? Ans. 44.
16. Suppose a man to have been 78 years old in the year 1806; in what year was he born? Ans. 1728.
17. What will 12 tons of hay come to at 27 dollars per ton? Ans. 324 Dollars.
