

The War Cabinet of the British Empire, a photograph just received in this country. Left to right, seated: A. Henderson, Lord Milner, Lord Curzon, Bonar Law, Lloyd-George, Sir Robert Borden, Mr. Massey and General Smuts. Middle row: Sir S. Sinha, the Maharajah of Bikair, Sir J. Meston, Austen Chamberlain, Lord Robert Cecil, Walter Long, Sir J. Ward, Sir George Perley, Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hazen. Back row: Captain Amery, Admiral Jellicoe, Sir Edward Carson, Lord Derby, General Morris, Sir M. Hankey, Mr. Lambert and Major Storr.
Exclusive photo © American Press Association.

The British show real American ingenuity when they hit upon this plan of cleaning a 15-inch gun aboard ship. However, being drawn through the bore is probably a pleasure to the tar who has been through the tangle of enlistment red tape.
Photo © Underwood & Underwood.

At Plattsburg, the rookies are learning how to go after the Huns with the bayonet. Much like the dummy-tackling in football practice is this method of lunging at a bag filled with sand and bones, to give the same differential resistance of tissue and bones.
Photo © American Press Association.

Firing a salvo from one of Uncle Sam's latest model coast defenders, disappearing type. This view was made at one of the most important fortresses on the Atlantic coast—name censored.
Exclusive photo © American Press Association.

The portable field-telephone as employed by a trooper of the militia of the University of Washington. The instrument is carried in suitcase form, with wires attachable to the trunk-line at any pole.
Photo © Bain News Service.