

Jailbreaking is actually a great selling point for iPhones, iPods, and iPads, making them an even better reason to be purchased. It allows you to customize the appearance of the device in a more personalized way and can also make using the device easier and faster. I jailbreak to be able to have quick access to enabling/disabling wifi and bluetooth settings and just to make the iPhone experience easier, nicer and better. I don't understand why it wouldn't be legal at all.
