

Dear US Copyright Office,

I am a jailbreaker but I do not use it to download illegal applications. Rather I use it to get tweaks that make my life easier. For example, I use SBSettings to put toggles in the IOS 5 Notification center for wifi, 3g, etc. I use apps provided by a jailbreak to just add functionality to my smartphone, not to steal from developers. I feel that to not extend coverage for Jailbreaks is unfair to those consumers like me who just want to add fancy features to our phones and tablets. I would also like to point out that the recent IOS 5 jailbreak for the iPhone 4s had millions of downloads in the first few days. I can't say that all of them are in the US but I know that a good chunk of them are. To make jailbreaking illegal would allow for hundreds of thousands of people to become targets of lawsuits and penalties.

Please do not let this injustice happen.

Andre Nozari