Dear Office,

Last summer I was really glad to encounter the approval of the DMCA exception that legally allows the jailbreaking and unlocking of smartphones. Freedom of software and hardware plays an important role in nowadays' modern computing.

As the expiration date of this exception is getting sooner, I'd like to express my concord with it. Smartphone users, hobbyists, developers (including myself), researchers and other computer experts need the ability to really own their devices in order to get the best results regarding usability, ergonomics and general interoperability. I'm looking forward to the renewal of this exception which makes present-day smartphone systems really smart.

Yours faithfully,

Árpád Goretity
