

RE: Exemption to Prohibition on Circumvention of Copyright Protection Systems for Access Control Technologies

I believe that consumers should be able to do what they want with any electronic device they have purchased. As long as the intent of the circumvention is done for personal use and used for legal purposes, circumvention should not be deemed illegal. For example, the new iPhone 4S has battery life issues that are still not totally resolved. There are a couple of solutions available that currently resolve the issue, but the iPhone must be jailbroken in order to apply the fix.

Please respect the consumers rights of ownership of these devices and renew the exemption to prohibition. As we all know, even if it is deemed illegal, people will still find a way to work around it if the desire is there.

Thank you.

D Ringo