

I am supporting the exemption of "jailbreaking" both video game consoles, and smartphones/tablets.

I am a hobbist video game developer, as well as a daily user.

I want to jailbreak the device because it is MY device -- whether or not I do nefarious things with that power should be entirely up to me, not to the government (there's no restriction on owning cars because they're used in vehicular homicide). Also, jailbreaking allows developers to develop applications for such devicies without having to go through the long process of getting an SDK – sometimes something that's an impossibility due to lack of previously developed titles. Finally, in the case of smartphones and tablets, jailbreaking allows developers to bring functionality to the devices that simply aren't available because the manufacturer has reached that devices end of life, or that manufacturer decided not to include it.

But you know this... so please support the exemption.