

My name is David and I support the legal use of jailbreaking. I am a user and I would like to ensure that my iPod and apple products are able to be jailbroken by me. I would like for jailbreaking of all devices to be legal. It should be our choice to void the warranties of the device. If it is jailbroken and the warranty is broken, why should they care? If anything, they are getting more money because we have to buy another device if the device is broken.

The user should be able to do whatever he or she wants to do with his or her device. She bought it and it is his or her device to play with, tinker with, keep clean, make dirty, put stickers on it, or just down right jailbreak it.

I personally love to see what people can do with their skills of developers whether I actually use their product or not. It should be their right to practice their skills on new devices. This, I believe, helps the nation into advancing into the future. If more people developed more computing systems, tweaks, and software, the world could advance in a much higher rate than it already it.

Let us do what we want with our devices. It's out God given right do what we want with our property.
