To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to ask for an exemption to jailbreak any and all personal computing devices.

I am a user/hobbysit.

I feel that jailbreaking and modifying a personal computing device is akin to customizing a car with different tires, engine parts, or cosmetic changes in order to allow the end user to use their purchased product in a manner that suits their needs. If we allow for the modification of vehicles, computers, or any other consumer product, I don't see a reason why other personal computing devices are not allowed. I feel that limiting my choice in terms of modification limits the functionality of the device, being that device manufacturers and creators are not able to produce a product that is geared towards every individual's personal preference. Jailbreaking allows for this customization with little to no harm done to the creator of the product.
