

First of all I would like to say that jailbreaking is not, is another tool use to customize the operating system to your liking. We all want to be individuals and want to give our things our own unique touch. Jailbreaking allow us to do so, on our smartphones. I have been an owner of an iphone for the past 3 years and I have been jailbreaking it ever since I got my hands on one. My intensions for jailbreaking my phone was not to bypass purchasing apps at the app store. But to give my device my personal look that I fee comfortable makes it more me. I love the ability to change the font of the system, the theme, add tweaks that are not offer on the app store, like closing all of the apps that are running in the background at once with one button rather than closing one app at a time which becomes time consuming. Another tweak that I like and I use is the SBS settings that give me access to some of the most use settings on my phone almost instantaneous from any app and any screen that I am using at that moment. Another tweak that I like is being able to access the root folders on my iphone wirelessly through another computer and look into all of the files present on my device. Apple has restricted access to these files and I feel that is incorrect for them to do so, because these files contain your personal information therefore they should be open to the user that has store their info there. These are some of the things why I consider jailbreaking another tool for the iOS that is missing and should be an option to the end-user if he/she chooses to utilize it.
