

Jaime A Mannino

In regards to smartphones, tablets, game consoles and other person electronics;

I believe should be allowed to be jailbroken. I am a hobbyist and academic student that uses many personal devices that are jailbroken to push the limits of such devices to help aid my everyday life.

Much like a personal computer, once bought, a person should be able to install and tinker with his or her personal electronic device as they see fit. A smart phone, tablet, and game console are all already in the realm of being defined as a personal computer. They all include several microprocessors, data storage, and run complex operating systems. It would be an injustice to the consumer who is spending their hard earn money to lock said devices from their full potential.

Innovation should be encouraged in this country, not locked down.