Hello, I am currently a student attending Southern Illinois's University Edwardsville and I wanted to share my opinion. I know that some parts of the DMCA is being reviewed and I just wanted to push my support for the continued freedoms we have. I have a rooted android phone. I rooted it so that I could install the newest version of Android on it because the manufacture (HTC) has decided not to release it. I would be very upset if this had been illegal for me to do. I feel that with these newer electronics there are too many "gatekeepers" and the ability to jailbreak the programing is a way to keep them in check. If you look at the iOS platform, almost all the features that now come standard were introduced by the jailbreaking community. When the original iPad came out I was able to jailbreak mine and add multitasking to it. This feature was not available at the time. One could argue that the only reason Apple released these features is because the popularity of jailbreaking. Thank you for your time. Jeremiah Kistler
