

This is my confirmation of my (John Rogers) support of an exemption request proposed by the Software Freedom Law Center to allow jailbreaking of "personal computing devices." I find it very important to be able to do what I want with what I own. From customizations on my car to modifications to my home. This to me should always include the modification of PC/phone/tablet/consumer-electronics software and hardware to the owners liking. People should have the legal right to change the things they own to the way they want them. I have a custom-rom on my phone because the buttons have been reversed from the phone I owned previously and I wish for the phone to function more like the previous phone I owned. With this custom ROM on my rooted device I can rearrange the order of the buttons. If I were no longer able to do this simple function I would return or sell my phone.
