

I don't think we should support any type of government control on how we use devices that we have paid for. This is how America has always operated in the computer age. Our freedom to let the public pioneer new ways of using technology has led us to be the advanced country that we are. I don't see any argument that could support taking away doing what you'd like to do to your own phone or video game console. Even if there was a law there's not even a way to fight it as people will always do what they want and find a way around anything blocking them. It's a losing battle.
