

February 4, 2012

US Patent Office

Dear Sirs,

I am a iPhone user and have owned every model since originally released in 2007.
I have jailbroken each of my iPhones for a number of reasons.

Firstly, I like to customize the “look” of my iPhone and only by being jailbroken do I this flexibility.

Secondly, there have always been aspects of the operating software that restricted using my iPhone as I wish, such as the number of apps in I can place in folders.

Thirdly, there are many non-Apple apps that tremendously increase the functionality of my iPhone such as being able to instantly close all open apps.

I strongly urge the US Patent Office to not deny me the ability to legally modify my iPhone as I choose.
After all, I paid for my iPhone, it is my property and I should be able to modify my property as I see fit.

Sincerely,

Robert Tweedie