Summary: I believe jailbreaking smartphones should remain legal.

I fully support jailbreak smartphones. I am an ipod touch user and have been for years. Apple attempts to hold back the devices they have. There are so many developers that have creative ideas that they can add to devices but it seems like if Apple didn't think of it, they don't want it to happen. What harm is jailbreaking devices really causing? The reason I love to jailbreak my ipod touch is for the added customizations. I like to see my name in the corner instead of "Ipod". I like to change my app icons, the additions to the notification center, and especially much changing the starting logo when the device starts up. Without jailbreaking I couldn't customize my device at all, the way Apple wants it would be what I would have to settle with. I believe jailbreaking smartphones should remain legal.
