

Hello Copyright Office,

- I support jailbreaking exemptions for smartphones, tablets, & video game consoles.
- I am a hobbyist.
- I would like to ensure I may continue to jailbreak iPhones, & iPads. And also future Playstation & Wii models.
- Some of the reasons I want to jailbreak are to customize my icons, boot logos, and the amount & size of the icons on the screen. If I can't jailbreak my iPhone for example I couldn't have 5 icons in a row, I would be limited to just 4. I also couldn't have my custom Star Trek sound effects.

I was born in 1971, and when I turned 16yrs old I bought a 1974 Chevy Nova car. And my life in high school would've been really boring if there had been a law against customizing my car. I loved painting my car my own color, putting on decals, air shocks, & buying custom wheels, etc. I couldn't imagine breaking the law because I painted a GM car an unofficial color of orange & painted "Chevy" in cursive. So, why should it be illegal for me to make an iPhone icon a different color, style, or design?

If a person were to break into an Apple or GM factory and steal a car or iPhone – that is and should be a crime. However, it's an American tradition to customize & tinker with property you own. And jailbreaking a smart phone, tablet, or video game console follows that – so please don't take that freedom away. The simple FREEDOM to do with my legally purchased private property as I wish.

Thank you,

Scott Massar
