Comment: I support this exemption because I wish to see the history of gaming and old games preserved legally. This means we need the right to bypass old authentication servers that no longer exist, DRM and other protections, so that an old no longer supported game can even be run. Being able to run legally acquired yet old games is certainly is not the disaster that the industries lawyers would have is believe. If old games are a threat to current games success, old books would have prevented the printing of new books - lord of the rings reprints would have killed harry potter. The very idea is ludicrous! *
