SURRENDERS

1945

Introduction by James J. Hastings and Goddard Winterbottom

National Archives and Records Administration, Washington, DC
World War II, the deadliest war in history, began in Europe with the German invasion of Poland, September 1, 1939. For almost 6 years it raged across the Western World, taking the lives of 11 million soldiers and an equal number of civilians. Finally, by the spring of 1945, the major Allies—the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and France—had brought to exhaustion the will and fighting capacity of the German war machine. Slowly but completely, the Nazi-led Third Reich collapsed, not in a single surrender at one time and place but in a series of piecemeal surrenders culminating on V-E (victory in Europe) Day, May 8, 1945.

The unplanned surrender had posed a touchy problem for the Big Three chiefs of state: British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Soviet Premier Josef Stalin. They agreed unanimously not only that surrender should be unconditional, but also that it should take place simultaneously on all fronts. Behind this second resolve was the Russian suspicion that Germany would succeed in making a separate peace with Great Britain and the United States and the western Allies’ memory of Nazi-Soviet collaboration from August 1939 to June 1941. Even with seeming agreement among the Allies, the road to unconditional surrender proved to be as bumpy as it was long. The major signposts along the road were the following:

July 25, 1943. The first break in the Axis alliance comes when Benito Mussolini resigns as Italian premier and is replaced by Marshal Pietro Badoglio.

September 8, 1943. Badoglio surrenders Italy on the eve of the Allied landing at Salerno, but Nazi troops install Mussolini as puppet head of German-occupied Italy, September 12.

February 1945. At Yalta, U.S.S.R., the Big Three chiefs of government issue a joint statement: “It is our inflexible purpose to destroy German militarism and nazism and to ensure that Germany will never again be able to disturb the peace of the world. . . . It is not our purpose to destroy the people of Germany, but only when nazism and militarism have been extirpated will there be hope for a decent life for the Germans and a place for them in the comity of nations.”

April 23, 1945. U.S. troops cross the Po River and resistance on the Italian front collapses.

April 25, 1945. U.S. and Soviet troops meet at Torgau in the heart of Germany.

April 29, 1945. All German forces on the Italian front surrender, to be effective May 2.

April 30, 1945. The suicide of Adolph Hitler gives German leadership to Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz.

May 4, 1945. On Lueneberg Heath, German troops in Belgium, the Netherlands, and northern Germany surrender.

May 7, 1945. In Reims, the unconditional surrender of all German military forces is signed, to become effective at 11:01 p.m. the following day.

May 8, 1945. V-E Day. At Soviet insistence, formal instruments of unconditional surrender are signed in Berlin.

May 23, 1945. The principal members of the German government are arrested for alleged war crimes.

June 5, 1945. The Declaration on Germany is issued. By this instrument, the four Allied nations (now including France) assume complete political control of Germany.
The Allied drive across the Po River in northern Italy led to the first installment of Germany’s piecemeal surrender. There were many delays and false starts. The German negotiators had to hide their efforts from Hitler—and often from each other. Finally, representatives for both sides reached an agreement on terms and convened at Caserta, Italy, to sign the surrender document.

At the simple ceremony on April 29, 1945, a member of Col. Gen. Heinrich von Vietinghoff-Scheel’s staff yielded up all the armed services in the German Southwest Command. A second German signature was that of SS Gen. Karl Wolff, whose organization had assumed a major role in the Nazi occupation of northern Italy after the Badoglio surrender in 1943. The acceptance was signed on behalf of Field Marshal Sir Harold Alexander, Supreme Allied Commander in the Mediterranean Theater.

Even though this was to be only a local surrender, the Allied commanders were enjoined to secure Soviet assent lest Stalin feel justified in his earlier accusation that Truman and Churchill were scheming at a separate peace. Although Stalin finally gave his approval and Soviet Maj. Gen. Alexi Kislenko attended the signing, the circumstances of the surrender in Italy magnified the always-present Russian suspicions. This was a factor in the later Soviet insistence on a second surrender at Berlin, superseding the Reims surrender.
Like so many other events in military history, the signing of the Instrument of Surrender of All German Armed Forces in Holland, in Northwest Germany Including All Islands, and in Denmark took place on May 4, 1945, in a tent, on this occasion at the headquarters of British Field Marshal Sir Bernard Law Montgomery on Lueneburg Heath in the German state of lower Saxony. While regarded as a tactical surrender of forces in the field only, the Lueneburg Heath document, in article 5, states this surrender to be “superseded by any general instrument of surrender imposed by or on behalf of the Allied Powers,” thus anticipating the unconditional surrender of the German nation at a later date.

The signers for Germany were, in order of seniority, Gen. Adm. Hans Georg von Friedeburg, chief German negotiator and commander in chief of the German Navy; Lt. Gen. Eberhard Kinzel, chief of staff to Field Marshal Ernst Busch, commander in chief of the German armies in the Northwest; Rear Adm. Gerhard Wagner, director of the German Military Cabinet; and staff officers Col. Fritz Poleck and Maj. Hans Jochen Friedal. Field Marshal Montgomery, commander of the British-Canadian 21st Army Group, signed the document with the authorization and as the representative of the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force, General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower. (Montgomery also made a handwritten addition to the first article to include naval ships in this surrender.)
On May 6, Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz, who had become head of the Third Reich on Hitler’s death, authorized Col. Gen. Alfred Jodl to conclude a general German surrender with General Eisenhower. The text of this order reads “I authorize Colonel General Jodl, Chief of the Operations’ Staff in the High Command of the Armed Forces, to conclude an armistice agreement with the headquarters of General Eisenhower.”

The new German approach met the demands of Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force (SHAEF), for a total, unconditional surrender of all German forces on both the western and eastern fronts. Doenitz and other German leaders had hoped until the last minute to make a separate peace with the British and American armies while continuing to resist the Soviet advance in the East or at least making some arrangement whereby German troops could avoid surrendering to Soviet armies. These alternatives, clearly contrary to the spirit and letter of accords reached at summit conferences between the Big Three heads of government, were rejected out of hand by General Eisenhower, at whose insistence the first instruments of unconditional surrender were signed the following morning in Reims.

The unconditional surrender of the German Third Reich was signed in the early morning hours of Monday, May 7, 1945; the time on the documents is noted as 0241 hours, or 2:41 a.m. The scene was the war room at SHAEF, located in the Professional and Technical School at Reims, a historic city in Northeastern France that had been almost completely leveled by the Germans during the war.

Across the conference table, representatives of the four Allied Powers—France, Great Britain, the Soviet Union, and the United States—faced the three German officers delegated by President Dönitz. Col. Gen. Alfred Jodl, who alone had been authorized to sign the surrender document; Gen. Adm. Hans Georg von Friedeburg, a chief negotiator here as on Luneberg Heath; and Maj. Friedrich Wilhelm Oxenius, an aide to Jodl.

Lt. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, SHAEF chief of staff, led the Allied delegation as the representative of General Eisenhower, who had refused to meet with the Germans until the surrender had been accomplished. Other American officers present were Maj. Gen. Harold R. Bull and Gen. Carl Spaatz.

British observers were Adm. Sir Harold Burrough, Lt. Gen. Sir Fred Morgan (SHAEF deputy chief of staff), and Air Marshal J. M. Robb. Maj. Gen. Ivan Sousloparov, head of the Soviet mission to France, represented the Soviet High Command; he was accompanied by Lt. Ivan Chermiaev and Senior Lt. Col. Ivan Zenkovitch as interpreters. Representing the French chief of staff (Gen. Alphonse Pierre Juin) was Maj. Gen. François Sevez.

The surrender document signed at Reims at 0241 hours on May 7, 1945, was not the official document that had been authorized in July 1944 by Churchill, Roosevelt, and Stalin. The July 1944 instrument had been produced through the arduous labors of the European Advisory Commission (EAC), which was set up in 1943 to work out the details of the unconditional German surrender and to propose specific solutions to the political and economic problems that were anticipated in postwar Germany.
Although the EAC surrender document had been sent to General Eisenhower, two intervening developments deterred SHAEF officials from using it at Reims. First, France had been added as a signatory, causing the 1944 draft to be regarded by SHAEF as preliminary only. Second, the Big Three, meeting at Yalta in February 1945, had decided to add the word “dismemberment” to the calls for disarmament and demobilization already included in their guidelines for Germany’s future, expressing thereby a determination to prevent further German militarism by partitioning the country into separate political units. The EAC drew up a new surrender document incorporating these changes.

SHAEF officials concluded, however, that political and other considerations should be settled at a high civilian level after the cessation of hostilities. Accordingly, they drew up their own military document, one directed only at ending the fighting and halting further bloodshed. Article 4 of the Act of Military Surrender, however, like Article 5 of the Luneberg Heath Instrument of Surrender, looks ahead to additional accords. Inserted at the urgent behest of John Winant, U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain and representative to EAC, it ensured that the purely military surrenders of May 7 and 8 would be supplemented later by a general political surrender that contained the EAC provisions.

The more than 44 hours between the signing of the Act of Military Surrender and the cease-fire to take place at 2301 hours, or 11:01 p.m., on May 8 represented a concession to the Germans by SHAEF, one that unintentionally allowed more German troops to be moved westward for surrender to American or British and Commonwealth forces rather than to those of the Soviet Union.

Signers of the surrender document were Col. Gen. Alfred Jodl, on behalf of the German High Command; Lt. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, representing General Eisenhower; Maj. Gen. Ivan Sosloparov, fulfilling the Big Three agreement that a Soviet representative would take part in any ceremony of total surrender; and Maj. Gen. Francois Sevez, signing as a witness for France.

Relaying the Surrender Orders

A second document signed at Reims contains orders from General Smith about procedures for disseminating detailed surrender instructions to German army and air force units on the western front. The specific orders were to come from the Allied unit commanders to their German counterparts.
The Surrender of German Naval Forces

The longest by far of the Reims documents contains a series of instructions for the surrender of all German naval forces, both surface and undersea. It was signed by Adm. Sir Harold Burrough on behalf of General Eisenhower. Both this document and the one previously mentioned (relating to army and air forces) emphasize the concern of SHAEF officials at Reims with bringing military activities to a halt and leaving the broader and more general provisions of surrender to a later time.

Agreement for Formal Ratification

An agreement to meet at a later date—to be specified by General Eisenhower in his capacity as Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force—for a formal ratification of the unconditional surrender was also signed by Colonel General Jodl at the Reims ceremony.

Major General Sousloparov had been sent to Reims by the Soviet High Command to take part in the negotiations, but he was not empowered to sign any agreement. As a consequence, a critical phrase in the document is “with plenary powers,” powers not delegated to Sousloparov. Thus a meeting was scheduled the following day in Berlin in response to Soviet concern that the Reims ceremony had given the impression of being the separate German surrender to the American and British forces that Dönitz had sought.
Authorization to Execute Ratification

After the capture of Munich on April 29, 1945, two GIs chat with liberated British prisoners at the entrance to the beer hall where Hitler and his henchmen started their aborted “putsch” in 1923. (208-AA-33TT-2, National Archives)

With a letter, Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz, now also the German president, authorized the signing of the formal unconditional surrender of Germany. Following the specifications of the final Reims document signed by General Jodl, Doenitz appointed three men to represent the German nation in the ceremony at Berlin on May 8: General Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel; General Admiral Hans Georg von Friedeburg, a participant at both the Lueneberg Heath and Reims ceremonies; and Col. Gen. Hans Juergen Stumpf.

The letter reads: “I authorize General Field Marshal Keitel as chief of the High Command of the Armed Forces and simultaneously as Commander in Chief of the Army, General Admiral von Friedeburg as Commander in Chief of the Navy, Colonel General Stumpf as representative of the Commander in Chief of the Air Force to ratify the unconditional capitulation of the German fighting forces to the Commander in Chief of the Allied Expeditionary Forces and the Soviet High Command.”

The Instrument of Surrender

To reassure the Soviet Union that the western Allies had no intention of concluding a separate peace with Germany, General Eisenhower requested that the Soviet representative in his theater, Major General Sousloparov, be authorized to participate in the Reims negotiations. But after the signing of the Reims accord, Soviet chief of staff General Alexei Antonov notified SHAEF that German troops continued to fight against Soviet forces, while scarcely resisting in the West. Thus the Reims surrender continued to resemble a separate truce on the western front, thereby belying Allied unity. The Soviet command wanted the Act of Military Surrender, with certain additions and alterations, to be signed at Berlin.

To the Soviets, the documents signed at Berlin on May 8, 1945, represented the official, legal surrender of the Third Reich. The U.S., British, and French governments regarded it as a symbol of Allied unity, east and west, and as merely the more formal of the two ceremonies ending the war.

Unlike the Reims documents, which were authoritative only in their English text, the surrender documents signed at Berlin on May 8, 1945, were written and signed separately in the English, Russian, and German languages.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower had originally planned to attend the ceremony at Berlin in his capacity as Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force. But because the Soviet plenary representative was to be Marshal Georgi Zhukov, a group commander well below him in rank, Eisenhower selected SHAEF deputy supreme commander, British Air Marshal Sir Arthur Tedder. Protocol specified that Tedder sign as Eisenhower’s representative and Zhukov on behalf of the Red Army. General Jean de Lattre de Tassigny and General Carl Spaatz signed as witnesses. Signing for Germany were Keitel, Von Friedeburg, and Stumpf, as designated by Doenitz.

The Berlin document had few significant changes from the one signed a day earlier at Reims. The phrase “Supreme High Command of the Red Army” was substituted for “Soviet High Command”; article 2 was altered to require that Germany “disarm completely”; and the demand that ships and military equipment not be damaged was made more detailed.

President Truman’s V-E Day Proclamation

As part of the V-E Day celebration, President Harry Truman issued a proclamation designating the following Sunday, May 13, as a day of prayer and thanksgiving. In this proclamation the President notes the “final and unconditional surrender” of Germany but warns that victory must still be won “in the East” (Japan). Only then will the world be “cleansed of the evil.” This victory would come in a little over 3 months with the surrender of the Japanese government, August 14 (U.S. time).
Epilogue

As a means of bringing about an orderly transition of power in Germany, the Allies allowed the government of Grand Admiral Karl Doenitz to remain in power for 16 days. On May 23, 1945, however, the principal members of the government were taken into custody for trial as war criminals.

On June 5, the Allied commander in chief issued the Declaration on Germany, which represented the official assumption of political control of the nation by the four occupying powers—the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and France. This instrument was to replace the broader political surrender that had been anticipated in the Reims and Berlin surrender documents.

Of the Germans who were involved in the surrender ceremonies in Reims and Berlin, Doenitz received a 100-year prison sentence and Keitel and Jodl were hanged after trial at Nuremberg; Von Friedeburg committed suicide before his trial.

ГЕНРАЛ ДЕ ЛАЛЯР ДЕ ТАССИМ
KAPITULATIONSERKLÄRUNG.

2. Das Oberkommando der Deutschen Wehrmacht wird unverzüglich allen Behörden der deutschen Land-, See- und Luftstreitkräfte und allen von Deutschland beherrschten Streitkräften den Befehl geben, die Kampfhandlungen um 2301 Uhr Mitteleuropäischer Zeit am 8 Mai einzustellen und in den Stellungen zu verbleiben, die sie an diesem Zeitpunkt innehaben und sich vollständig zu entwaffnen, indem sie Waffen und Geraete an die örtlichen Alliierten Befehlshaber beziehungsweise an die von den Alliierten Vertretern zu bestimmenden Offiziere abliefern. Kein Schiff, Boot oder Flugzeug irgendeiner Art darf versenkt werden, noch dürfen Schiffsrumpfe, maschinelle Einrichtungen, Ausrüstungsgegenstände, Maschinen irgendeiner Art, Waffen, Apparaturen, technische Gegenstände, die Kriegszwecken im Allgemeinen dienlich sein können, beschädigt werden.

4. Diese Kapitulationserklärung ist ohne Präjudiz für irgendwelche an ihre Stelle tretenden allgemeinen Kapitulationsbestimmungen, die durch die Vereinten Nationen und in deren Namen Deutschland und der Deutschen Wehrmacht auferlegt werden mögen.

5. Falls das Oberkommando der Deutschen Wehrmacht oder irgendwelche ihm unterstehende oder von ihm beherrschte Streitkräfte es versäumen sollten, sich gemäss den Bestimmungen dieser Kapitulations-Erklärung zu verhalten, werden der Oberste Befehlshaber der Alliierten Expeditions-Streitkräfte und das Oberkommando der Roten Armee alle diejenigen Straf- und anderen Massnahmen ergreifen, die sie als zweckmaessig erachten.

6. Diese Erklaerung ist in englischer, russischer und deutscher Sprache abgefasst. Allein massgebend sind die englische und die russische Fassung.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

The Allied armies, through sacrifice and devotion and with God's help, have wrung from Germany a final and unconditional surrender. The western world has been freed of the evil forces which for five years and longer have imprisoned the bodies and broken the lives of millions upon millions of free-born men. They have violated their churches, destroyed their homes, corrupted their children, and murdered their loved ones. Our Armies of Liberation have restored freedom to these suffering peoples, whose spirit and will the oppressors could never enslave.

Much remains to be done. The victory won in the West must now be won in the East. The whole world must be cleansed of the evil from which half the world has been freed. United, the peace-loving nations have demonstrated in the West that their arms are stronger by far than the might of dictators or the tyranny of military cliques that once called us soft and weak. The power of our peoples to defend themselves against all enemies will be proved in the Pacific war as it has been proved in Europe.

For the triumph of spirit and of arms which we have won, and for its promise to peoples everywhere who join us in the love of freedom, it is fitting that we, as a nation, give thanks to Almighty God, who has strengthened us and given us the victory.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, HARRY S. TRUMAN, President of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Sunday, May 13, 1945, to be a day of prayer.

I call upon the people of the United States, whatever their faith, to unite in offering joyful thanks to God for the victory we have won and to pray that He will support us to the end of our present struggle and guide us into the way of peace.

I also call upon my countrymen to dedicate this day of prayer to the memory of those who have given their lives to make possible our

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this eighth day of May in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-five and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-ninth.

By the President:

Acting Secretary of State.
