Court Takes Pity on "Mrs. Johnston," the Woman of Refinement Caught Thieving.

She Leaves for San Francisco, Her Home, with Her Identity Remaining a Secret.

HER NAME CONCEALED BY FRIENDS.

Discharged Upon Withdrawal of the Complaint by the Proprietor of the Large Department Store from Which She Pilfered.

Considerable mystery surrounds the identity of Mrs. Annie Johnston, who was arrested on Monday charged with pilfering small articles from O'Neill's Sixth avenue dry goods house.

"Mrs. Johnston" was detected, according to the evidence of Louise Elford, the woman detective at O'Neill's, in taking three silk underdresses and some small articles. She refused to allow Miss Elford to search her, and she was taken by Policeman McCormack to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station.

OCHS'S WORK AS A MASON

Brought from Chicago on a Charge of Swindling—His Lawyer Threatens a Sensation in Masonic Circles.

Jacques Ochs, recently indicted by the Grand Jury for swindling by means of creating bogus Masonic lodges, was brought from Chicago yesterday by Detective McNaught, of the District-Attorney's office. He was arraigned before Judge Cowing in Part I. of the General Sessions, where he pleaded not guilty.

Detective McNaught said that while en route from Chicago the prisoner's meals had to be brought to him, and that at Albany Ochs volunteered the information that as soon as he discovered that the detective was a Mason he feared that he would be put out of the way, and would not take chances of being alone with him.

The Slayer of Rose Finn Found Guilty of Murder in the Second Degree.

The Prisoner Received the Verdict Nonchalantly, but His Aged Parents Were Bowed with Grief.

JUROR HILL ASKED FOR CLEMENCY.

The Jury Deliberated Nearly an Entire Day—The Convicted Man to Be Sentenced Friday—An Appeal Not Probable.

After deliberating for twenty-two hours and forty-five minutes, the jury in the trial of Michael McGowan, who killed his sweetheart, Rose Finn, rendered a verdict of murder in the second degree, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, yesterday afternoon.

The jurors, with one exception, were in favor of murder in the first degree. Leonard L. Hill, the seventh talsman, held out for an acquittal, and it was only when Justice Smyth announced that he would keep the jury locked up until an agreement was reached that a compromise was effected.

When word was received that the jury was ready to come in the large crowd that had gathered about the corridors made a rush for the court room.

The prisoner appeared unconcerned when the verdict was announced, but McGowan's father and mother wept. McGowan indignantly gave his pedigree to Clerk Walsh, and continually looked at his counsel, Messrs. Chandler and Chapman.

Before Justice Smyth had an opportunity to address McGowan, Juror Hill arose and asked that clemency be extended. This, he was informed, would be impossible, as the verdict of murder in the second degree was carried with an overwhelming majority. McGowan was then remanded until Friday for sentence.

Lawyer Chandler said he would not appeal the case, as the trial was not unfair and he still believes, however, that McGowan is subject to fits of insanity. When the prisoner was led away by the Deputy Sheriff Louis Smith, his father and mother shook him by the hand. His aged parents followed him over to the Tombs, where they bid their son an affectional farewell.

The jury had argued the case all of Monday night, and at midnight Justice Smyth ordered that they be locked up. Twice they came into court for instructions. The last time, at the request of one of the jurors, the entire testimony of Mrs. Swan, the girl who was killed, and the letters written by McGowan while in the Tombs was also read to the jury.

While the jury was deciding his fate McGowan spent a restless night in his cell. The keepers kept a close watch on him, and reported that he paced up and down his cell, and that he had several times attempted to escape by the window.

The convicted man was desperately in love with Rose Finn, and for a time she returned the affection. In July she spoke to him about his disreputable habits, and finally renounced him because he spent most of the time in saloons.

On the morning of the crime Rose started from her home in West Twenty-second street and walked up Tenth avenue on her way to work. She was a double-walled, high-top street, where he killed her. He fired three shots at her, two of which entered the left side of her head. He then turned to his escape, but was arrested a few hours later on the extreme east side of the city.

The defence in the trial was insanity.

Ash Cart Drivers Search Vainly for Walking Delegate P. J. McNulty.

Both Lawyers and Chase Around the City in the Hope of Getting Money.

OBJECT TO THE ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Claim that Twenty Per Cent of the Entire Sum is Entirely Too Much to Be Given to the Lawyers.

Ash cart drivers crowded the Potter building yesterday to look after their back claims due a year ago. There was an impression that Patrick J. McNulty, the walking delegate of the Hosiery and Drivers' Protective Association, would be there to pay more of the claims.

This was borne out by his announcement Monday afternoon that he would pay the claims of the men in Stable G yesterday. A rush of men was made first to Stable G, and then to the office of Lawyer William J. Walsh, who represented McNulty in the suit against the city.

McNulty was not there, and they could get no information as to his whereabouts. Back they went to Lawyer Goodhart's office, angrily clamoring for McNulty. After a while they went away to look after McNulty elsewhere.

Lawyer Walsh said yesterday that all the claims had been assigned to McNulty originally, and that the action of the seventy-four street cleaners who employed Lawyer Goodhart was independent of McNulty's action. Lawyer Goodhart, on the other hand, said he knew nothing of the matter except that he had been engaged to represent the seventy-four street cleaners.

"I am sorry that such a turbulent scene should have taken place in my office," said Walsh, "but the matter was not my fault. The broken window in the daytime. The watchman construed their action as an attempt at burglary, and, thrusting his revolver through the broken glass, threatened to shoot unless they stopped to see what the matter was, not having noticed the broken window in the daytime. The watchman construed their action as an attempt at burglary, and, thrusting his revolver through the broken glass, threatened to shoot unless they stopped to see what the matter was, not having noticed the broken window in the daytime."

Young Lago went into the doorway of the store to look at some of the clothes in the window. He saw the light of a revolver, and, running to the front of the store, blazed away, making a small hole and splintering the glass. The boy's face at the time was close to the glass, and the bullet made a slight cut on his chin.

LAGO'S NARROW ESCAPE.

With a yell he bounded into the street, crying he was shot, while Lucky looked to examine the prices on the clothes in the window.

McLennan Glyn, of the Oak Street Station, who was on duty, ran to the boy and then decided to arrest the watchman. The door, however, was barred by the lock outside, and the watchman made up his mind to open it. Young Lago declared that he had not intended to do any damage, but he was cornered by the price of an overcoat in the window. He said he sold papers and blacked boots at No. 41 Cortlandt street and lived at No. 42 Oak street.

McNulty said that he had paid 110 men on Monday night, and that the men will be paid at the various meeting places nearest their stables if they will only give him time to get around to them.

CUSTOM HOUSE REPAIRS.

Architects Say Additional Stories Would Be Impracticable—Rumors of Bowling Green Site Purchase Revived.

McKim, Mead & White, the architects who were appointed to make an examination of the Custom House building on Wall street and report on the practicability of extending it by the addition of new stories, have reported to Collector Kildreth that the plan is not feasible.

In the report they point out that the building is not strong enough to stand the weight of an extension in height, and that to reconstruct the interior into convenient quarters is almost impossible. As the Custom House is pressed at present for so much of a puzzle to strangers as to go from one building to another, it is as well to walk around a block, and all the offices are very dingy affairs.

It is as big an undertaking to add to the building as to build a new one, and the architects, the Bowling Green site syndicate is said to have sent representatives to Washington to urge Congress to buy the site, and that they were so engaged through, but the purchase could not be effected because the syndicate advanced the price for the site in the bill it was provided that the old Custom House should be sold for $4,000,000, but this price could not be realized.

LOCKED IN THE STORE.

LUCKY WAS LOCKED IN THE STORE.

Thought Lago Was a Thief and Fired—An Officer on Guard to Arrest Him When the Store is Opened This Morning.

Charles Lucky, a night watchman employed by the Union Clothing Company, at No. 19 Park row, made an attempt to kill Frank Lago, a newsboy, fifteen years of age, by shooting at him through the window of the clothing store, at 8 o'clock last night.

At the time the shot was fired the streets were crowded, cable cars were passing, and it is considered a miracle that some one was not struck by the bullet, which grazed Lago's chin and must have fallen in close proximity to the Astor House on the other side of Broadway.

Lucky is an old man, in the neighborhood of sixty, whom the boys along the row have had fun with for several weeks. At night, when he takes charge of the store, the proprietors lock him in by a Yale lock on the outside.

Two weeks ago a window in the place was broken, it is believed, by the boys along Park row, and the proprietors of the clothing store read the riot act to the old man, and accused him of sleeping instead of watching.

MORE WATCHFUL THAN EVER.

The next night he occupied a seat in the broken show case.

In the early morning three printers from "Lucky's" newspaper passed by and stopped to see what the matter was, not having noticed the broken window in the daytime. The watchman construed their action as an attempt at burglary, and, thrusting his revolver through the broken glass, threatened to shoot unless they stopped to see what the matter was, not having noticed the broken window in the daytime."

Young Lago went into the doorway of the store to look at some of the clothes in the window. FATHER MADE HIM SEAL.

Twelve-Year-Old John Tully Says He Was Turned into the Street at Midnight.

Driven Out with Curses Because He Had Come Home Without Any Booty.

WAS FOUND SOBING ON A COAL BOX.

Declared His Father Followed Him to See He Did Not Play, and Beat Him Cruelly When He Failed.

"He is my son, but I want nothing more to do with him. He is a liar, and you are a fool to believe anything he says." This was also turned into a policeman's ears at 2 a. m. yesterday through the crack of a chained door on the second floor at No. 148 Bedford avenue, Williamsburg.

A few minutes before Officer Burke, of the Bedford Avenue Station, had found twelve-year-old John Tully lying face downward on a coal box, shivering with the cold and crying as though his little heart would break. "What are you doing there?" asked the officer, rather gruffly.

Between his sobs the boy told the policeman he had been turned into the street at midnight by his father. He said he had been sent out in the morning with directions to steal anything he could lay his hands on, and had returned late without any booty.

He said he had been stealing for two years under the direction of his father, who often followed him to see that he did not play and fool away his time. Whenever he returned empty-handed his father cursed and beat him.

On this trip of plunder, which had continued through more than twelve hours without anything to eat, he had not been watched, and had failed by design. He said he had been playing with Willie Held and Henry Dutch, two boys of his own age. When he came in the old man threatened to beat him, but he slipped off to bed and thought he had escaped. Soon his father came to the bedside, compelled him to dress himself, and turned him into the street with the curse: "I never want to see you again!"

At the station house the officer made a charge of vagrancy, and then hurried away to the home, with the result given.

The boy was taken to the Lee Avenue Police Court at 10 a. m. The mother was there to help send the boy to some institution. "The boy is a liar and a thief," she said. "Both I and my husband have tried to reform him, but all in vain. We taught him his prayers, and sent him to church and to school, but it did no good."

The boy interrupted his mother to say that he never would have stolen had he not been driven to it by his father. "Had I refused to steal I would have been cruelly beaten," sobbed the lad.

The Justice recognized the boy as having been before him several times for theft, and as having been sent to the Truant School twice within the last year. He also remembered that the boy's father had been before him several times charged with drunkenness and fighting his neighbors.

It was testified that the father had lived in ill-health for nearly a year, supposedly living on the stealings of the boy. He was so ill, when the boy had been caught, the father had pleaded with stern keepers not to prosecute him, and had promised to give him a whipping.

The Justice sent the boy to jail on a charge of vagrancy, with the understanding that the Children's Society will thoroughly investigate the boy's charge against his father.

MERCHANTS FAVOR PEACE.

The Belfast Chamber of Commerce Sends a Letter of Sympathy to the New York Chamber.

Belfast, Jan. 14.—The president of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce has sent the following cable dispatch to the president of the New York Chamber of Commerce:

"A letter of sympathy in response to your resolutions of January 2 goes on the steamer 'Teutonic'."

The resolutions referred to in the above dispatch as having been adopted by the New York Chamber of Commerce were as follows:

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, being profoundly impressed with the gravity of the situation which has arisen in consequence of the war existing between Great Britain and the United States, appeals to the common sense and common interests of the people of both countries to accept the calamity of war by a resort to arbitration, or other peaceful means, which has so often been found to be a sufficient and satisfactory mode of settling international disputes, and in the interests of international peace, precedent and the humanitarian spirit of the age.

Resolved, That the president of the Chamber of Commerce appoint a special committee of fifteen members, of which the president shall be one, to consider the expediency of an effort to be made on its part in conjunction with similar organizations in Great Britain and the United States, to the end of obtaining the submission of the whole Venezuelan boundary dispute for investigation to a joint committee, to be composed of the members of the commission already appointed by the President of the United States, and to be presided over by some man of eminent character and ability, to be agreed upon by the Government of Great Britain and the United States; the commission so constituted to be a court of arbitration, but a Commission of Inquiry or of Advice, to be appointed to report the results of its investigation and its opinion to the Governments concerned for their consideration.

Resolved further, That if the special committee of fifteen members should deem it such an effort be made, it shall have power to enter in the name of the Chamber of Commerce into correspondence with other commercial organizations and other organizations of public-spirited citizens to effect their co-operation and to do such other things as they may deem useful and proper to further the object in view.

THEY FIRED ON AMERICANS.

Outrageous Treatment of a Peaceful Party of Hunters by Mexican Soldiers.

Carloz, Mexico, Jan. 14.—James H. McHann, his sons and A. J. Blevins and Walter Stockland, a party of Americans on a hunting and trapping expedition along the Rio Grande, were fired upon by the Mexican soldiers forty miles south of this place day before yesterday, and were compelled to jump into the river to save themselves, leaving their four skiffs, traps, bedding, etc., which were confiscated by the Mexicans.

McHann says that his party went into camp during the afternoon on the American bank, but noticing suspicious looking characters on both sides, they moved to a small island in the middle of the river.

Next morning, after they had launched their skiffs, the Mexican soldiers began firing and they were compelled to take to the water to save themselves.

The party arrived here this morning foot, on their way to Laredo, where they intend to make complaint to the proper authorities.
