

Growing Easter lilies for the market—spraying the plants when they are six week old.
Photo from Janet M. Cummings.

The lilies on the left are eight weeks old, those on the right from twelve to sixteen weeks.

The Allies caricatured in Berlin Easter Eggs. Press Illustrating Service.

The Allies caricatured in Berlin Easter eggs. Press Illustrating Service.

The Sunrise Easter Service at Riverdale, Cal. It is held on a rocky hill. Six years ago only a few score people attended the service. Last year twelve thousand people gathered to worship.
Press Illustrating Service.

A field of a million rare lilies, valued at $1.50 a bulb. These lilies, which so closely resemble Easter lilies come from Thibet. They are grown in a five-acre field at Roslindale, Mass., by R. and J. Farquhar, and were brought to the United States by E. H. Wilson, of the Arnold Arboretum.
Modern Photo Service.

Easter lilies at maturity.

Photo from Janet M. Cummings.

Some of the twelve thousand worshippers at the Sunrise Easter Service held at Riverdale, California, in 1915.

Press Illustrating Service.