

The city fathers and mothers of New York exhibiting their babies and receiving prizes at the City Hall. Baby week in New York revealed that every borough had its best baby. The first prize, a $250 cup, was won by John Ryan, of The Bronx. Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., pinned the ribbon of honor on his manly breast. Greeley Photo Service.

Liffey Street, Dublin, after the fighting between the rebels and the troops sent to suppress the rebellion. The photograph resembles one taken after a German bombardment of a French town. Irish revolutionists did more damage in Dublin than all the German Zeppelins that have bombarded the United Kingdom. © International Film Service.

Miss Frances Leggett, daughter of New York's millionaire grocer and one of America's chief heiresses, leaving the church at Stratford-on-Avon with her husband, Margesson of the 11th Hussars, after their wedding. Photo from Janet M. Cummings.

The Irish rebels, makers of a republic of a day, fought with street barricades made of everything that came to hand, as did the men and women of the French Revolution. The photograph shows British soldiers behind one of the barriers captured from the rebels. © International Film Service.

Villa is still at large. American soldiers are burying their dead and retreating. Congress and the Administration are still debating the Mexican situation. The photograph shows the burial of a private of the 6th Infantry in the sands of Mexico. He died near San Antonio, Mexico, while chasing Villa. His comrades are lowering him into his grave. The militia is preparing to protect the United States border from Mexican raids. © Underwood & Underwood.