cured, besides being cooked as you like it, make up the sum of comfort.

During the Summer months the price of a room and bath will be $2.50. Commencing in September the price will be $3.00. The prices for meals are reasonable and the portions are liberal. Frequently a portion is enough for two people. Certainly two portions are ample for three people.

THE Belleclaire, like all other good hotels, has emerged from the Fall and Winter season with a greater measure of prosperity than it ever before experienced.

New York hotels—conceded to be the equal of any in the world—have been doing a wonderful business, and there is reason to believe that the coming Summer will show continued prosperity. Business is moving along smoothly in all directions and hotels naturally feel its impetus.

The Belleclaire is not as large a hotel as we would like to have it, but we would not wish to change its size unless we could maintain its atmosphere.

We can entertain 300 guests comfortably. We wish to emphasize that word "comfortably."

A fine big room, with bath, good bed, spotless linen, good ventilation, fine view, good service, given without regard to tips, and the food supplied the best that can be se-

The Belleclaire does not appeal for trade because of the economies it offers, although if good service is obtainable at moderate cost there are many people to seek it. It is our idea of hotel management to give guests as much as we possibly can. Our net profit per person per week is very small—but keeping the hotel full of people all of the time makes the profit total all right.

We might make more profit, but there is greater satisfaction in managing a hotel that everybody likes—that everybody wants to come back to after staying with us—that everybody says gives full measure—than there is in crowding everybody to make all the money one can out of them.

People who come to the Belleclaire from the outside for their meals all say that they get what they want served in the best possible way, at prices lower than the average. Yet we serve the very best food at all times.
