

Russia Flings Her Far Flung Battle Line to France. Russian troops marching through Marseilles; on the left is the mascot, Ivan Pavlovich Ignatiev, who will hear the Czar's contribution to the defense of the Western front. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.

"General von Hindenburg—a Man of very Long Mustaches and very Short Ideas." Another Faber caricature from "Critica," of Buenos Ayres, now published for the first time in New York.

Sunset or taps on a British transport. An Australian bugler is blowing the "turn in" call on a British transport carrying soldiers "somewhere in the war zone."

"Critica," a Buenos Ayres publication, puts this caption on this Faber caricature, herewith first published in New York—"Archduke Frederick of Austria, Supreme Chief of the Austro-Hungarian Armies, and whose motto is 'Run, Always Run.'"

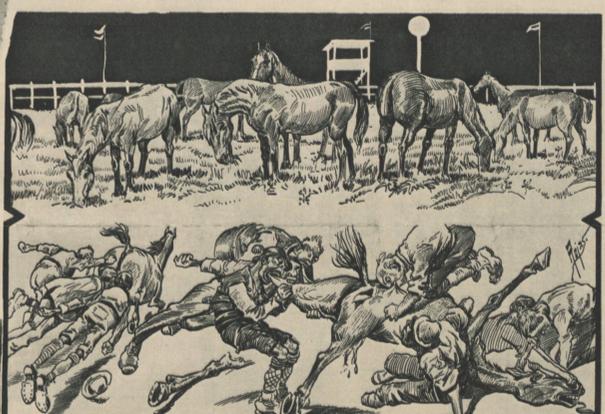

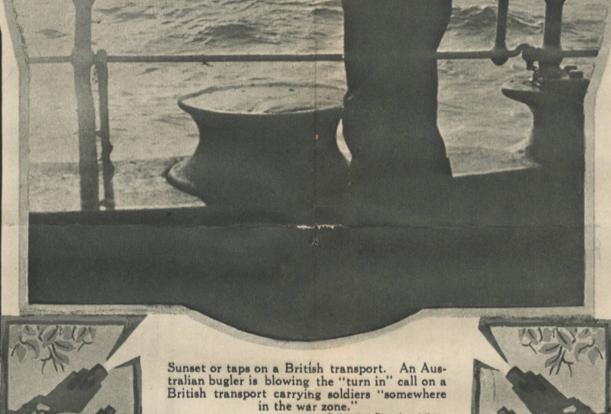

Russian soldiers get their first taste of French soup. The Poilu serving his Comrade Russ in the latter's camp at Mirabeau. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.

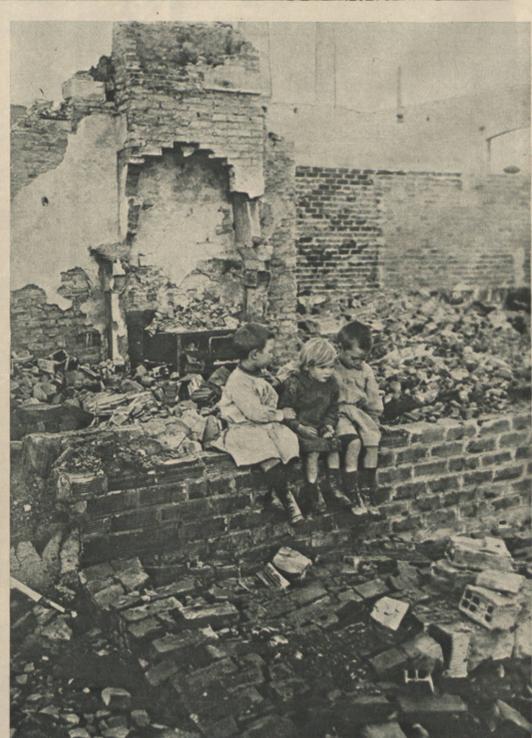

"Romeo et Juliet" in war time. The Poilu of France still wows his beloved Alsace, in person as well as principle. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.

A Faber black and white war caricature, republished from "Critica," of Buenos Ayres. Albert of Belgium, to the Kaiser—"If it were a case of man to man, instead of country to country, it would be quite another thing!"

A war caricature from "Critica," of Buenos Ayres—"In quiet England the King and Noblemen keeping up a brilliant sporting tradition, have their horses running on the race courses, but in Germany the poor people eat them. This is the difference between one country and another."

A Lesson in Frugality—"Home, Sweet Home." These French children are sitting amid the ruins of their home. Their father is dead or alive at the Verdun front. Their mother cannot be found. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.

A German "Fokker" forced to come down within the French lines. Both Great Britain and France now claim to have speedier battle planes than the "Fokker," heralded by Germany as the most efficient war aeroplane in use. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.

With the British Forces in Turkey—An open air service for the forces sent to relieve General Townshend, who recently surrendered at Kut-el-Amara.

Russian reserves, transported to France to aid in the defense of the Western front, marching to their camp in Mirabeau. Exclusive photograph from the French Minister of War.