

CLEARING THE WAY ON THE WEST FRONT—Heavy British guns, like the one shown in the photograph, on what are known as "railway mountings," have been among those which have demolished German trenches in the Battle of the Somme and paved the way for infantry onslaughts.

FIGHTING IN THE VOSGES—Simultaneously with the French advance in the Somme sector the Alpine Chasseurs have harried German troops in the Vosges Mountains. The photograph shows a mitrailleuse section of the French chasseurs going into action.

THE DEFENDERS OF KUT-EL-AMARA—Wounded Indian soldiers who fought vainly with General Townshend to stem the Turkish besiegers landing from a hospital ship after being passed through the Turkish lines.

ENGLISH WOMEN AS COAL NAVVIES—Fifty women are working as coal handlers for the municipal gas works of Coventry, England. Their chief work is filling barrows with coke, washing coke and wheeling it to trucks. They receive 24 shillings for a 55-hour week.

"And Then All Was Lost in the Roar of the Guns."

Lieutenant A. Goodwill Spalding, the adopted son of the late A. G. Spalding, New York sporting goods manufacturer, who was recently killed on the Western front while serving with the Inniskillen Fusiliers.

THE EFFECT OF SHELL FIRE IN THE VERDUN SECTOR—This photograph, while being that of an outlying Verdun "company fortress," shows the havoc wrought by French and English artillery in the bombardment of German lines in the Somme sector which preceded the Allied offensive.

AUSTRIAN AND GERMAN WOUNDED IN PETROGRAD—A recent estimate of the prisoners, wounded and otherwise, taken by the Russians in their drive against the Teutons in Galicia is 270,000.
