The Regular, who has taken luncheon at the Belleclaire at least 300 days a year for eight years, said to the writer the other day: "I come here to luncheon because I can always get what I want. Your cooking is the best in New York. I have been served with good food for eight years. Never once have I been supplied with anything that did not come up to the standard."

"By the way, why don't you give your LEMON MERINGUE PIE a chance in your advertisements occasionally? Your Apple Pie is very fine, but your Lemon Meringue Pie is far ahead of it to my notion. I suppose, however, that it is a matter of taste."

"I am glad to see so many people coming here for luncheon. Your fame for furnishing fine food is spreading. You deserve your success."

The Belleclaire is very fortunate in having so many good friends. Kind words pass along the line with great regularity. Word-of-mouth advertising, when it boosts, is very effective advertising.

We thank you, friend, for your boost. We thank all other friends who are consistently boosting.
