

AMONG US MORTALS—PEOPLE YOU MEET IN DRUG STORES

Drawn by W. E. HILL.

Waiting half an hour for the prescription which was to have been ready in five minutes.

The cashier—out late last night and thinking it over.

The new saleslady has heard it said that personality is a big asset in salesmanship.

The man at the perfume counter wants to know what size bottle she wants. May, who is busy trying to see what the woman next to her is buying, answers "38."

The lady who never can understand what, if this is the soda fountain and she has a dime, a soda check has to do with it.

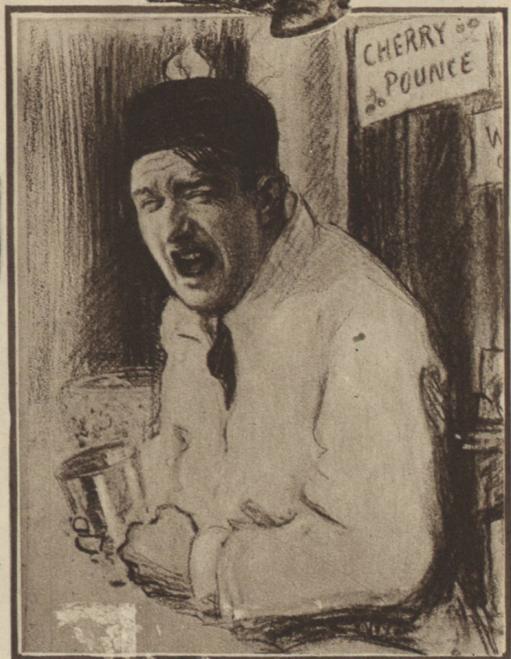

Charlie, the handsome soda mixer, takes a peep into the mirror.

Hunting for the drug counter in a modern drug store.

The undertrained nurse in the surgical goods department wondering what the manicure scissors are doing there.

The soda clerk sneezes over your egg shake and takes all the joy out of life.
