

THIS PHOTOGRAPH of a division review by a general in a reconquered ruined village in the Somme suggests, in its brave splendor of composition, a painting of Detaille. The French banners are forlorn but triumphant; the soldiers worn of body but proud of spirit.

© Press Illustrating Service.

ORDINARILY, FUNERALS at the front are attended with small ceremony; but when there is time, a Frenchman leaves nothing undone to honor his fallen brother in arms. This soldier is going to his last rest on a hill overlooking the field where he gave his life.

© Press Illustrating Service.