

O, would that we were kiddies again, to wear such clothes as these!

Photos by Lejaren & Hiller Studios.

Clothes, here
Rabbit, Turquoise and toys from Best & Co.

Jackie is offering his first love to the little visitor in the blue serge coat and mushroom hat, but we have a suspicion that the rocking rough rider has the first place in his heart these days. Big Sister in a checked gingham dress and white muslin guimpe is watching Jackie's advances, and Little Sister is hoping that they won't expect her to part with Mathilda. Mathilda just can't make her eyes behave; they will cross-eye to the smocking on her foster mother's blue chambray dress. If she were more than a doll she would appreciate the cleverly shaped yoke and pockets outlined in black and white dots.

Suit from Mosse, Inc.
He's a real live wire, though his years are few. And he would scorn any but real breeches of green linen, buttoned onto a white shirt collared and cuffed in green.

Party clothes from Anne Harmon.
"Ain't it a grand and glorious feeling," when you have eaten all the ice-cream and cake in sight and you hold tight in your fingers the long end of the snapper? That compensates Jackie for being dressed up in this shantling party suit. Little Sister is always ready to wear her striped wash silk frock with real lace and embroidered rosettes, and Big Sister just loves her Empire gown of white net.

Suit from Best & Co.
It's only the engine that counts in Jackie's young life, but mother will know that this tan pique suit piped in black and white stripes is new—brand new. And something new for the young hopeful is a discovery worth the making.

Dress and hat from Franklin Simon & Co.
She's growing up very fast, and has even attained the haughty stare that says "How dare you!" to the small boy who has broken her rolling hoop. And she knows as well as we do that her linen frock, with pockets trimmed in smocking to match the yoke, and leghorn hat, with van-colored velvet disks, are just the right kind of play clothes.

Hat and coat from Mosse, Inc.
It is martial law in the nursery now, and Little Sister is prepared for any declaration with this navy blue twill coat, strapped a la militaire, gilt braid and brass buttons.

Dresses from Mosse, Inc.
The dolls have come a-visitin', but Annabelle will persist in cuddling so closely to her mimmy that we can't see the white organdy panel down the front of the yellow and white checked dimity dress. Mathilda is a more forward child, and we can catch a better view of her mama's white cross-bar dimity frock, gay with insets of raspberry linen.

Hat and coat from Franklin Simon & Co.
Dolly must have her constitutional, and Little Sister is ready to take her, for she is wearing her new spring coat of light green serge. She is very proud of the pert flare at the sides and the nice jolly pockets for dolly's belongings.