

MUCH ADO ABOUT GRADUATION

Photographs by the Lejaren a Hiller Studio.

Frocks from Franklin Simon & Co.

"Ain't it a gran' and glorious feelin' " just to hold in your hands the strip of parchment that permits you to say good-bye to school days and be a real, grown-up lady. And it's a "gloriouser" feeling to wear at the same time an organdy frock with frilly bib and pockets and trimmings of tucks and embroidery, or a lingerie dress enhanced with eyelet embroidery, or again a white Georgette crepe embroidered in beads

Shirt-waist and skirt from Franklin Simon & Co.

In many colleges and schools the graduates are required to wear a tailored white linen skirt, plain shirt-waist with high collar, and cap and gown at the conferring of degrees.

Frock and wrap from Best & Co.

There is going to be no lack of beaux for this girl when she appears at the Senior dance in this white net frock plaited and inset with creamy lace, and an evening wrap of satin with sleeves formed by the drapings.

Frocks from Bonwit, Teller & Co.

If you were going to present the diploma to the girl best versed in the lore of clothes, you would surely hand it to the girl wearing the ecru-tinted net and Italian lace dress, or to the little lady in organdy, with old-timey French blue flowered ribbon and muffler collar.

Frock, hat and parasol from Best & Co.

The garden-party is one of the important functions of Senior week, and to it the graduate hostess wears her prettiest frock. Here it is, a white net banded with blue ribbon studded at intervals with squares of linen embroidered in many colors. Her hat is a leghorn, bright with wheat and cornflowers, and her silk parasol is supplied with a vanity bag.
