

Where Women
Do
Their Bit

Seeing is believing, and here you see the V that Mr. W. F. Morgan paid Marie Dressler for one great, fat eggplant. Really, it's not giving so much to the National League for Women's Service, for Miss Dressler is returning it with her best comedy face. Vegetables were the card of admission and the best sellers at the County Fair in Washington Square Underwood & Underwood.

A meeting of the Economy League of the Junior Colonial Dames at the home of Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius, now the executive office, where nothing in the way of paper goes to waste. Standing, left to right: Miss Constance Lord, Miss Isabel Stettinius, Miss Phyllis Brown, Miss Mildred Townsend and Miss Fleming. Sitting: Miss Hilda French, Miss Charlotte Delafield, Miss Julia Zabriskie, Miss C. White, Mrs. Ralph Rainsford, Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius and Mrs. Junius S. Morgan, Jr. Exclusive photograph Press Illustrating Service.

That we are but children of older growth we (of all uncertain ages) realized the minute we caught sight of the red, white and blue balloons that Miss Marguerite Finch and her aids were selling at the Washington Square Garden Party. They had only one rival—the "hot dogs." American Press Association.

Miss Isabel Stettinius will sell you a burlap bag for twenty-five cents at her home, 6 East 73rd Street, and also the magazines to stuff into it. And oh, how glad the soldiers at the front are going to be when they receive them! Exclusive photograph Press Illustrating Service.

"Certainly, I will look after your babies while you hear the lecture." Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt told the women who came to the "canning special" accompanied by a day nursery. Then she demonstrated that she could do two things at the same time by explaining the advantages of preserving vegetables and fruits. Kadel & Herbert.

The lure of the bargain, or was it the finery that had actually played a part on the society stage, or again the saleswomen—you can judge their appeal from the picture of Mrs. Lydie Hoyt—brought hundreds of dollars to the rummage sale given by the New York State Woman Suffrage party. The funds will be donated to the recreation centres established at the training camps. American Press Association.

"Raise and Preserve" is now the slogan of the women of Long Island. And the "canning special," shown in the long shot, gave it to them. The close-up shows the women of the Food Reserve Battalion—reading left to right: Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, Mrs. William Laimbeer, Mrs. J. Watson Webb, Mrs. G. W. Pierpont, Mrs. H. B. Fullerton and Mrs. Ralph Peters—who distributed pamphlets, displayed tempting jars of vegetables and fruits, and demonstrated the "how" of canning, preserving, salting and drying. the aftermath, they hope, will be canning stations dotted all over Long Island. Kadel & Herbert.
