

Friday to Monday Clothes

Posed by Diantha Patterson of "Our Betters" Co.

Photographs by Lejaren a Hiller Studio.

Frock and furs from Franklin Simon & Co.
The dance Saturday evening is likely to have its momentous moments, but our little guest is going to get lots of fun out of them, aided by this orchid taffeta dancing frock embroidered in silver. If the atmosphere should grow a bit chilly because of intruding dowagers, there is this ermine and kolinsky cape.

Costumes and umbrella from Bonwit, Teller & Co.
It's first appearances that count, you know. Hence the canny guest arrives in a knowing costume of blue serge with buttoned vestee and high collar of pique, and topped with a beige velours hat. Her umbrella, protection against both sun and rain, has a beaded strap handle. Because the motor will meet her at the station, she will carry a top coat, a combination blue gabardine cape and white frieze silk waistcoat.

Costume from J. M. Gidding & Co.
One can't week-end without sporting a bit—at least in her clothes. The sleeveless jacket is the high novelty. Here it is in bright green satin, and acts as the connecting link between the green and white plaid flannel skirt and the green straw mushroom.

Dress, hat and bag from Franklin Simon & Co.
Garden seat from James P. McHugh & Son.
Any man would harken to the "Come into the garden" call, were he sure of finding something like this on the garden seat, primed for action, even before the noon hour, in one of these deceptively simple shirtwaist dresses of striped wash silk, the story in her eyes partially hidden by the white crepe hat faced in straw and banded in white feathers. Even the knitting bag is good ammunition for such a wise young person.

Canopy table and chairs from James P. McHugh & Son.
Dresses, hats and parasol from J. M. Gidding & Co.
She just couldn't resist packing her new French blue organdy frock—even though organdy doesn't lend itself to cramped quarters—because she knew her hostess would wear her orchid organdy to the Country Club for tea. And with it she included a leghorn, sprouting wheat and garnished with flowers, to offset the lavender organdy and silver lace hat of the hostess.

Pajama suit from Bonwit, Teller & Co.
Our clever little week-ender is going to be ready for any contingency by taking with her this de luxe edition of the pajama suit—blue and yellow chiffon trouserettes and figured silk jacket—in which she can appear at all of the star-chamber conferences.