

The Fifteenth Colored Regiment of New York is now camping at Peekskill. Here the troopers are shown enjoying a brief respite from duty, by the aid of a lady-less fox trot.

Trees in Dresincourt cut down by the Germans in their hasty retreat before the advancing Allied forces on the Western front. Photo Kadi & Herbert.

How naval hydro-airplanes are transported on the decks of battleships. The flier is here seen lashed to the vessel-deck, whence it can easily be launched. Photo © International Film Service.

The far-famed bivouac fire is good for something else than telling stories around, for here are guardsmen somewhere in New York, developing films by its light after drill hours. Photo Herbert Keller.

A bit of Latin-American opinion on the Kaiser. The view is of a refuse chute in a Chilean city bearing the legend scribbled above the opening "Post-box for Germany," and surmounted by the Kaiser's caricature. Photo W. D. Garvey.

The throne room in Dublin Castle is now used as a convalescent ward, for Lord Wimbourne has turned over the ancient home of kings to the war sufferers. It now houses 300 officers and 4000 men.

Allies at Dartmouth. Left to right, Captain Dupont (French), Captain Porter Chase (American) and Captain Louis Keene (Canadian), who are giving military lectures, conducting drilling and teaching trench warfare at the Hanover, N. H., College. Photo © K. D. Smith.

nadian), who are giving military lectures, conducting drilling and teaching trench warfare at the Hanover, N. H., College. Photo © K. D. Smith.