

Vaulting imaginary wire entanglements is one of the things in which student officers at the Fort Sheridan training camp must acquire skill. This idea has been taken from the English system of training.

© International Film Service.

Miss Grace Parker, president of the National League for Woman's Service, who is organizing the woman force of the country for war work. If motor driving is your best accomplishment, be sure that under Miss Parker's direction, you will not be assigned to the domestic science corps.

© Underwood & Underwood.

There is danger of Sister Susie losing her job if any more of the soldiers adopt this method of spending their leisure moments. This industrious gentleman is a member of the officers' training corps at Fort Myer.

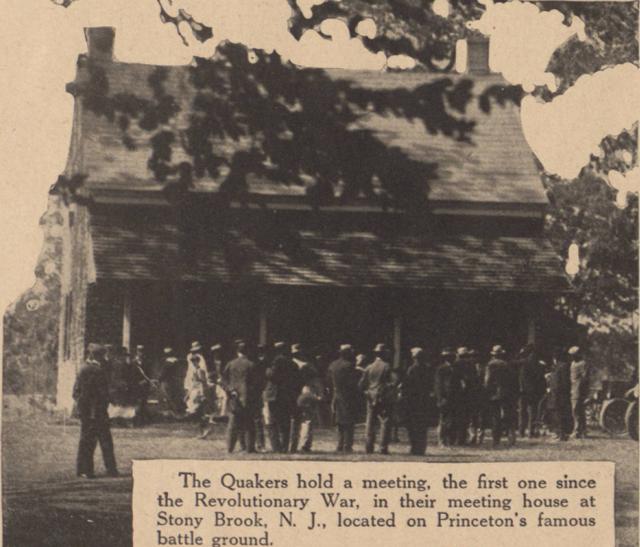

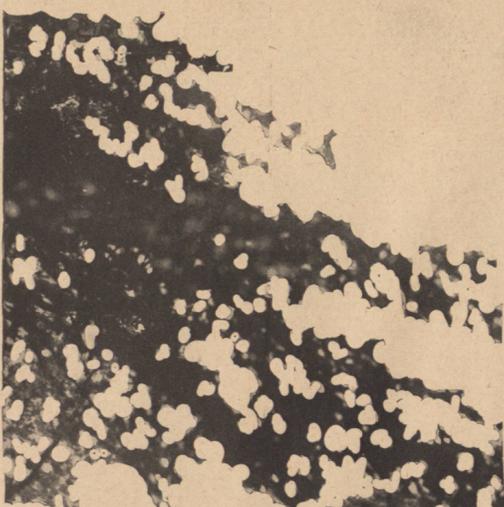

© International Film Service.

(Left) A few of the women in the Northern Pacific Railway shop at St. Paul, Minn., who are carrying on the work of men called for war service. Among them are stenographers, milliners and seamstresses, who, though untrained for the particular job of washing cars, seem not at all dismayed by the thought of it.

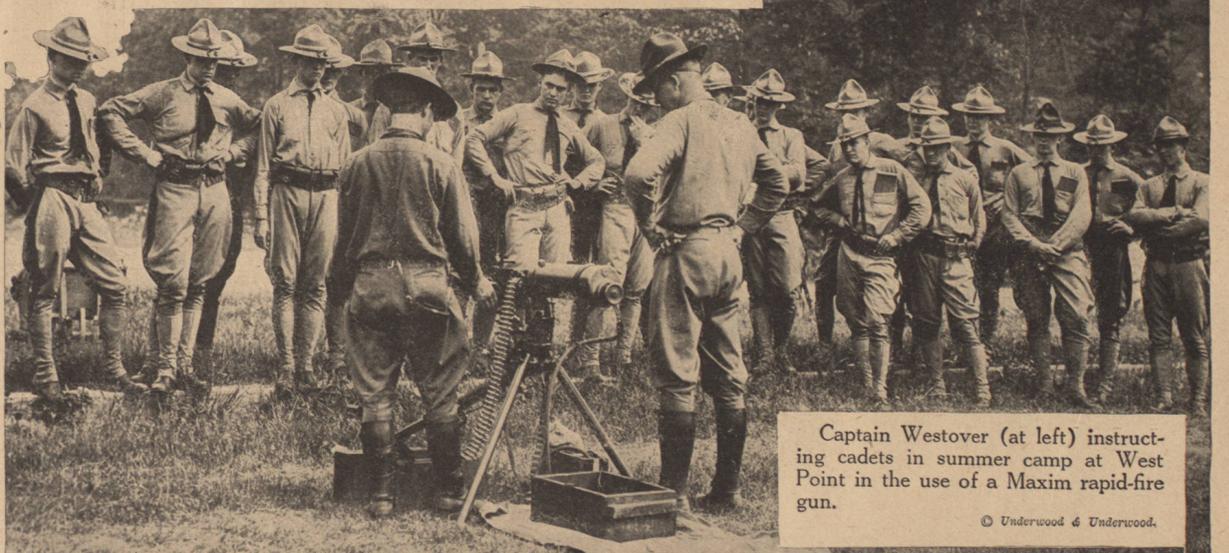

(Above) Firing of field pieces during a sham battle, the feature of the military pageant held on Franklin Field for the benefit of the University of Pennsylvania's base hospital.

© Underwood & Underwood.

The Quakers hold a meeting, the first one since the Revolutionary War, in their meeting house at Stony Brook, N. J., located on Princeton's famous battle ground.

Central News Photo Service.

Captain Westover (at left) instructing cadets in summer camp at West Point in the use of a Maxim rapid-fire gun.

© Underwood & Underwood.