

Talented Teams

A page of clever couples whose pens and pencils work together in solving that haunting question—"How to be happy though married."

Maud Tansey Fangel, the well-known portrayer of children, and her husband, Guy Fangel, art director for Le-jaren a Hiller, the photographer.

Those successful dramatists, the Selwyns, Edgar and Margaret Mayo, met while both were acting in "Secret Service." The better half of the partnership, who has conducted rehearsals for five plays during one week, says that woman can stand greater variety of interests than man. She has our moral support.

Ernest L. Blumenschein, a prize-winning portrait painter, and his wife, May G. Blumenschein, popular magazine illustrator. They were married while studying art in Paris.

George Cram Cook, author and playwright, and his wife, Susan Glaspell Cook, who is well known for her magazine stories. They were both born in Iowa, but decided to come East. Their present home is in Provincetown, Mass.

George Middleton, dramatist and literary critic, and his suffragist wife, Fola La Follette, actress and writer. Mr. Middleton is also literary editor of the weekly published by his famous father-in-law, Senator La Follette.

Below Walter Hale is equally gifted as a painter, etcher and actor, while his wife, Louise Closser Hale, is both actress and short-story writer, whose work is always marketable.

James and May Wilson Preston, illustrators two. Mrs. Preston is very much in vogue with the magazines. Perhaps she is talking to another editor now.

To the left Channing Pollock and his wife, Anna Marble Pollock, were once very successful publicity agents. They now write plays and books of their own.
