

Domestic science experts are mobilizing to train cooks for the millions of hungry men soon to be in Uncle Sam's armies. Here is one teacher whose instruction is given rapt attention by her pupils. © Bain

The photograph above gives an idea of what the Germans do to our hospitals in France when they can. When a hospital is not handy, an ambulance makes a good target. © Kadel & Herbert

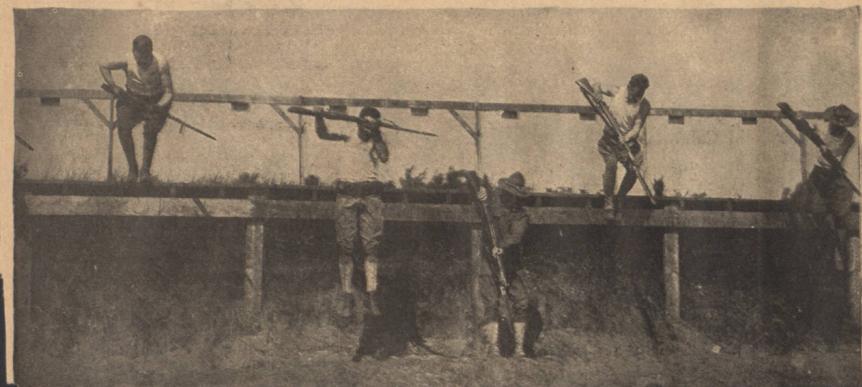

The sentry at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., comes to attention as the mailman arrives with the day's batch of letters from fond mothers and anxious sweethearts. New York National Guard troops will soon arrive here. © Int. Film Sono.

Above, M. Jonnart, who caused the abdication of King Constantine of Greece, leaves his office in Athens with a portfollio of documents that demand his attention. © Underwood & Underwood

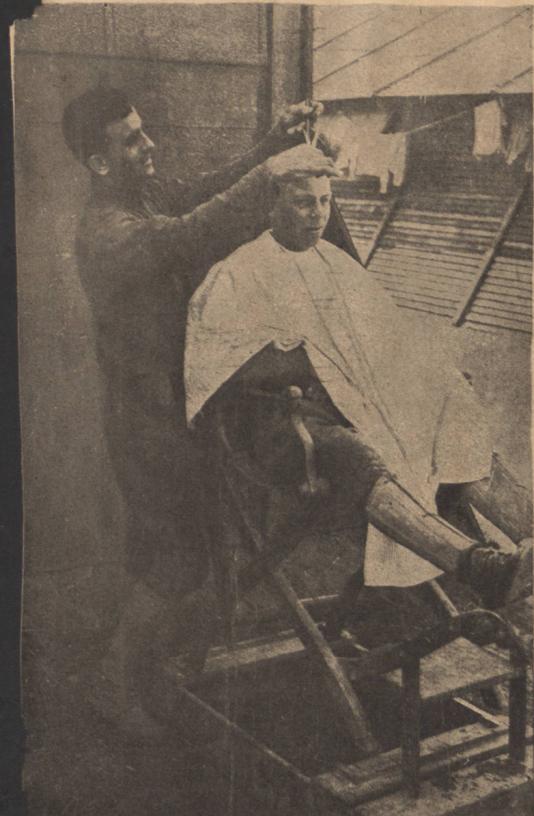

Dr. Page, our Ambassador to England, leaving St. Bride's Church, London, after attending a memorial service to London journalists who have fallen in the war.

The new officers who won their commissions at Plattsburg will know how to lead their men into the enemies' trenches, as the photograph on the left of them at bayonet practice shows clearly. © Brown Bros.

Regimental Sergeant Major W. H. Marsden, on the right, is the first man who enlisted in the Canadian army. He fought with the Princess Pats and the Ottawa Battalion Canadian Infantry and was wounded at Vimy Ridge, winning the Military Medal and the Distinguished Conduct Medal.

The chair in this open air barber shop in France is rather shaky, but the scissors are sharp and the Sammy on the left might imagine himself back over the water in a barber shop at home. © Pict. Press

"Intensive" training means just that in the American army in France. These boys in one of their leisure moments gladly stand at ease for a photograph. Do you know any of them? © Pict. Press

The water supply of our troops overseas is protected by every sanitary device known to our army medical corps. These metal cans keep the Sammies' drinking water sweet and clean. © Pict. Press

