

Lorenzo Bozzi's striking bronze typifying the "They shall not pass" spirit of the "Blue Devils" of France in a bayonet charge at Verdun. French Official from Pict. Press.

The Boche aviators will have a hard time trying to locate this artillery observation post on the Aisne. It is not only hidden in a ravine, but is exceptionally well camouflaged. The observer at the top is almost concealed by the vines and brush.

Paul Thompson.

The American flag in the picture to the left is the first to receive the fire of the enemy on European battlefields. It was forwarded by the Treasury Department at Washington to the Lafayette Escadrille through Ambassador Jusserand. Lieutenant William Thaw has just been given the flag, and in the photo carries it between the French Aviation and Aerostation flags. French Official from Pict. Press.

This gateway was about all the French found standing of Fort de la Pompelle on the Moronvilliers Plateau, after the German retreat. © Underwood & Underwood.

All the tremendous bombardments of the battles of the Somme failed to smash up this Canal Bridge arch on the Peronne-Baupaume Road. British soldiers have taken possession of it. British Official from Paul Thompson.