

LAST MINUTE NEWS PICTURES of Our Fighting Men Overseas

On the left, an early morning band concert in the camp of the United States Marines "Somewhere in France." The mess and supply tents can be seen in the upper right hand corner. The marines in the foreground have apparently waylaid a passing milkman. Note how the sides of the tents are all drawn up for airing, as ventilation and sanitation are two prime factors with our boys in khaki. French Official, Pictorial Press

On the right, Corporal Harold Willis, of Boston, member of the Lafayette Flying Squadron, who was reported in recent dispatches as being a German prisoner of war. Corporal Willis had to his credit up to the time of his capture twelve German 'planes. He is shown here in complete flying costume leaning against the side of his fighting 'plane. Note the Indian head insignia of the Lafayette Squadron. Pictorial Press.

On the left, a close-up of two of our regular army boys in France practising bayonet duelling in preparation for their first "go" at the Boches.

A quintet of our boys resting a minute on the Bridge de la Concorde over the Seine to enjoy the view of Paris. International Film.

An unusual photograph taken at the funeral services just back of the lines of two American ambulance drivers, T. R. Hamilton, of Clinton, Mass., and J. W. Gailey, of New Park, Penn. Both boys, less than a month in the service, were killed the latter part of July. General Nies-sell, of the French army, is decorating the caskets with the "Croix de Guerre," while the chaplain reads the service. Kadel and Herbert.

On the left, American jackies under escort of a couple of British "Tommys" trying out the soda fountain at the Y. M. C. A. headquarters of the U. S. Army in London. From their expressions, the British have apparently learned how to serve soda Yankee fashion. International Press Bureau.

A hungry group of American regulars impatiently awaiting mess call at their training camp in France. The censor has blotted out the inscription on the packing boxes to the left. Make your own guess as to what it was! Topical Press.
