

An unusual photograph of our first line of defence steaming full speed ahead with their guns trained to port on an imaginary fleet. This picture was taken looking aft from one of the superdreadnoughts of our battle fleet.

© E. Muller, Jr., New York.

To the left—a truly remarkable picture of French light artillerymen keeping their battery in action during a German gas attack. One of the "artilleurs" has been overcome, having neglected to properly fasten his gas mask. The photographer in order to take this picture had to wear one of these life saving devices of modern warfare.

Kodak & Herbert.