

With Our Boys in the Service Overseas

On the left—Dr. Hutchinson, in charge of the American Red Cross Hospital, Neuilly, France, proudly escorts General Pershing as they inspect the American Ambulance drivers.

On the right—A sextet of American soldiers looking out on London from the veranda of "Eagle Hut," the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. headquarters.

William Service.

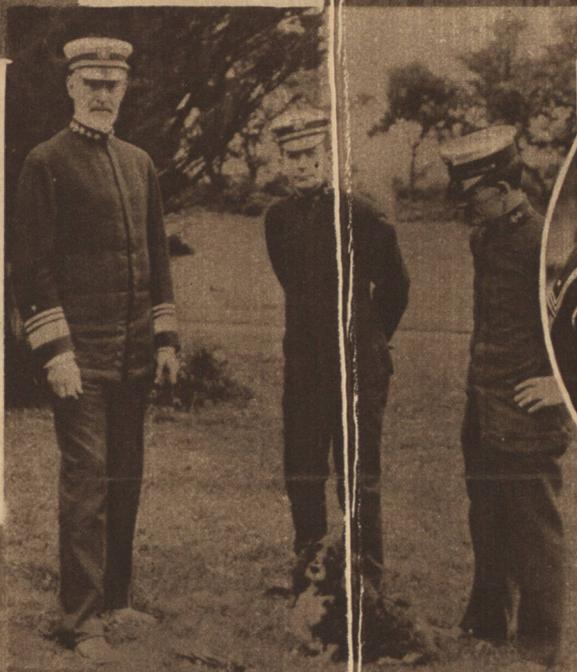

Below—A new picture of (from left to right) Admiral Sims, Lieut. Commander Babcock and Lieut. Commander Daniels at the American naval base in England.

William Service.

On the left—An American soldier in France showing some poilus how our Sammies handle their rifles. Note the rifle sling now in such popular use.

French Official Pictorial Press.

Mutual congratulations between an American jackie and a Canadian officer in London.

American Press.

Below—A company of American soldier boys drawn up in the streets of a quaint little village somewhere in France.

French Official Pictorial Press.

On the left—General de Puygradin salutes "Old Glory" and the regimental colors at a review of our troops some where back of the lines in France.

Underwood & Underwood.

Below—General de Puygradin, commander of the famous "Blue Devils," reviews the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

Underwood & Underwood.

Above—American soldiers in France being instructed in the modern art of grenade throwing.

French Official Pictorial Press.

