

Colonel Roosevelt's son Ouentin as an aviation pilot ready for his first flight over French soil. Int. Film.

Taylor, of the American Field Service in France, recognizes a German prisoner as an old acquaintance of his in the United States. Int. Film.

An Australian howitzer battery about to fire. Note that every man is equipped with a gas mask and that the gun has been carefully camouflaged by a netting of leaves. Int. Film.

Open air tonsorial parlor of our boys in France. The French kiddies seem to take great interest in this uncomfortable but necessary performance. Int. Film.

On the right—German prisoners in a Belgian "bull pen" sans boots and socks enjoying a well-earned and much-needed rest. Pict. Press.

On the left—Merely an incident in the day's work of a French poilu—getting a high power gun that has been put out of action by a German shell back on the job. Int. Film.

This photograph of wrecked homes near London clearly shows the terrific damage that may be done by a single German bomb. Two young lads living in the house were instantly killed in the bedroom, shown on the right. Underwood & Underwood.
