

Camera Glimpses of New York City's Most Recent Parades—For Woman Suffrage and the Liberty Loan

Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, chairman of the Woman Suffrage party of New York State, marched enthusiastically at the head of her own delegation.

Left to right—Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, Mrs. Gordon Douglas, Mrs. Cornelius Tangeman and Mrs. Katharine McCook Knox, four of the women flag bearers who led the parade.

Left to right—Miss Eugenia Ladenburg, Mrs. William Wood and Mrs. George A. Legg, standard bearers among the leaders of the parade.

Miss Neysa Moran McMein, the famous artist, responsible for so many of the clever cover designs on the magazines nowadays.

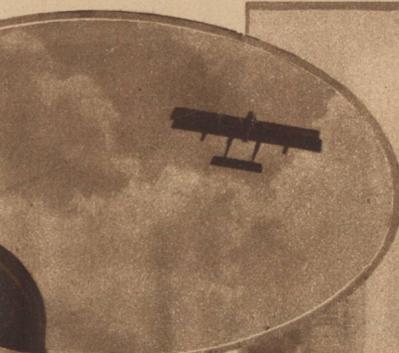

Mrs. Oliver Harriman headed the mothers, wives and sisters of our sailors and soldiers—a division that aroused enthusiasm all along the line.

This huge American flag preceded a large division of prominent New York business men.

On the right—Mrs. Herbert S. Carpenter, prominent suffragist, made a striking figure carrying silken Stars and Stripes.

"It's the most impressive showing for suffrage that could be made," said Borough President Marks as the mothers, wives and sweethearts in the Service Division swept by, bearing their big service flag.

The smallest, perhaps, of the marchers was the tiny Japanese actress, Mme. Komako Kimura.

Lieut. A. S. Resnati in his giant Caproni during the parade flying low over the Flatiron Building.

MORE than 35,000 men, women and children of New York City demonstrated their willingness to stand behind the government by participating in the colossal "Liberty Day" pageant parade on October 25. The Liberty Loan Committee, with Governor Benjamin Strong at its head led the multitude of marchers, and more than thirty floats symbolized the war and our effort to win it.

The Britannia, British caterpillar tank, was cheered vociferously as it chugged up Fifth Avenue under its own power.

Efficiency pennants won by the U. S. Battleship Texas created great interest along the line of march. On the left—Captain Victor Blue and Commander J. W. Timmons.

On the left—Benjamin Strong, jr., governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York District, speaking in behalf of the Liberty Loan.

That New York policemen did more than their share in coming across with Liberty Loan subscriptions is evidenced by this banner they carried in the parade.

J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., was the central figure in a long line of prominent New York bankers and Liberty Loan workers.

Erratum—Large photograph of Mayor Mitchel, page 8, October 21, copyright, Brown Brothers.