

The Greek professor who puts over a heavy Greek pun, an understanding of which demands an intimate knowledge of Xenophon's Anabasis, early Greek history and a little Sanskrit.

"Perhaps, if I may be allowed to put that last a little differently, we may say, so to speak" — Professor Koohl has finished his talk fifteen minutes too soon and is stalling till the end of the hour.

Charlie, under cover of taking copious notes, figures out his week's cash account.

AMONG US MORTALS THE COLLEGE CLASSROOM

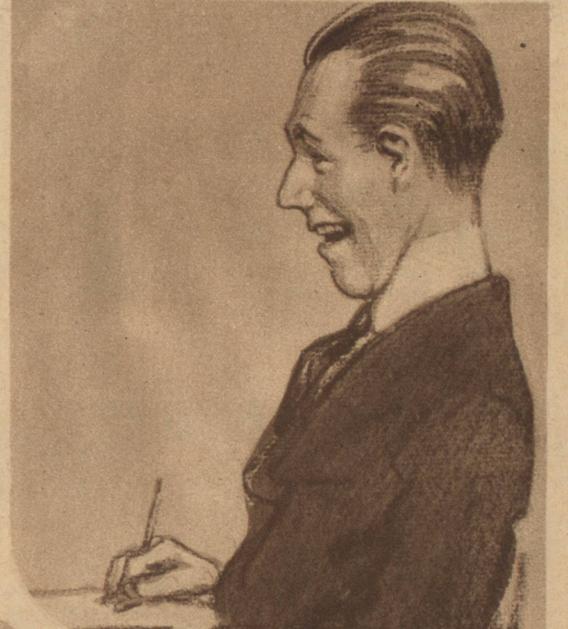

DRAWN BY W. E. HILL

"What's the use of pluggin' for an exam, when everybody knows he only passes every third paper!"

Eddie has a terrible morning-after headache and is awfully proud of it. He is hoping some one will ask him how he got it.

The man who always answers right when most of the class have failed on the question. Not over-popular unless some one wants to borrow some of his notes.

Mr. Spiegel, who has overcut the course five times and is worried about his mark, getting all ready to burst into uncontrollable laughter when the Greek professor tells the ancient joke.

The exam.—"Contrast as briefly as possible, laying due emphasis on the causal qualities, the characters of 'Lady Macbeth' and 'Tom Jones.'"
