

A column of French infantry flowing over the military roads leading to the firing line. These troops have been in billets for their "rest" period, and are now on their way up to relieve the troops holding their sector. Pict. Press.

Khan Younous, a desolate desert sentry post of the French army operating jointly with the British in the campaign in Palestine. Jerusalem, one of the objectives, was captured a few days before Christmas. Pict. Press.

From the looks of this ammunition caisson, abandoned by the Huns in retreat, the battery which it served was made the target of some very special attention by French gunners. Pict. Press.

All that remains of a particularly bothersome German battery. Shortly after its carefully camouflaged position was located by an English air scout it was totally wrecked by the Allied gunfire. Pict. Press.
