

AMONG US MORTALS THE HOME GUARD

By W. E. HILL

Section of the patriotic parade, showing Mrs. George Washington White, Mrs. Sims, Mrs. Leary and Mrs. Smythe-Jones, all of whom find they have a great deal in common.

Every time the war news looks black Mrs. Leggy just gives up and takes to her bed. It looks as though her day at the Red Cross would have to wait.

Harold Sandalwood, playwright, whose war play "Carrying On, Over the Top" was generally panned by the critics, is dead sure that he is a victim of German propaganda.

Miss Tupper, who has adopted a Belgian officer and is going to send him a big 10x12 photograph, wants the photographer to make sure he takes her "good side."

Mr. Miggs, for one, was relieved when the loan was subscribed. Mrs. Miggs was out selling Liberty Bonds and Mr. Miggs never quite got the combination of little Lilly's fastenings.

Mr. Dusseldorf, pacifist, who doesn't think Liberty Bonds a profitable investment and gave a dollar to the Red Cross instead.

A discussion of a good hour and a half in the smoker of the Pullman on what the Ford car has done for Detroit. Three minutes was enough for a war over three thousand miles away.
