

LUCKY GERMANS

There are many worse things in life for a German boy than being made prisoner and fed with regular food. One very feeble old man should be sufficient to keep these youngsters from trying to escape.

This rare specimen at the right, with the bifocal lenses, was picked up in an open field in Northern France. You can't make him mad by interning him.

Photographs from International Film.

A fair day's catch in Picardy. Notice the German officers hiding their faces from the camera, although the privates in the rear do not seem so averse to publicity. An American, on horseback, is escorting them.

Photograph from Press Illustrating Service

(Above)—Hesse-Darmstadt was never like this.

At the right are German prisoners, formerly held by Russia, now being returned to Germany at the conclusion of the peace "negotiations." The highroad between Riga and Petrograd has been swarming with these returning Germans, but there has been no congestion among the Russian prisoners returning from Germany.

Photograph from Thro. Moussault

