

ALL WOOL AND A MILE WIDE

A sheep ranch in Wyoming where uniforms are started for France © International.

Sheep are branded with a special paint which is easily scoured out of the fleece

Hauling a $20,000 "clip" of wool seventy-five miles to the nearest railroad

A dejected ewe, having been relieved of 10 pounds of fleece, avoiding the frigid gaze of a proud "woolly" once her friend

Before ewes are penned for shearing, they are separated from the lambs by a "dodge gate". After the shearing they are turned into the corral to find their offspring again.

A band of sheep, or "woollies" as they are familiarly called in the West, coming into the shearing pens