

Frederico Tinoco, President of Costa Rica, who has come into public notice through the refusal of President Wilson to recognize him, although he is apparently the popular choice of his countrymen and first severed diplomatic relations with Germany and then declared war. Tinoco is here shown at the Costa Rica "White House," at San José, with a group of officers of his army.
Brown & Dawson

Above, Miss Florence Baar, convoyed by Jack Story, is selling cigarettes at the Italian festa in New York last week, and at the left, using the same irresistible tactics, is Miss Gladys Cooper, making a success of the Children's Jewel Fund in London.
Paul Thompson—Underwood & Underwood

At the Westbury gymkhana on Long Island last Saturday for the British and Canadian Patriotic Fund. Sir Thomas Royden and Miss M. Burton in the Gretna Green.
Edwin Levick

The mountain farm in the wilds of the State of Washington, where Jeremiah O'Leary, having jumped his bail in New York, thought he would be safe from the Federal sleuths. He took possession, with several hundred chickens, and about two weeks later his trail across the continent was followed to his door by the government agents, and he was pulled out from under the automobile shown in the circle and brought back to New York, where he is now thinking it over until his trial for sedition begins.

A detachment of negro troops shown in the act of capturing a rich chord and holding it, without food or water, for a minute and a half.
Underwood & Underwood